NOW IT IS H-O-M-O-N-D

The Hogans, Who Fought For New Name, Have Secured It

If you call at 77 Westland avenue now has he for Edward J. Hogan, who lived here some months back, you might be old that there is no such person in the clouse.

The reason is that the Hogans, who interly fought that name in the proposate court last winter and tried unbuckessfully to have it changed to Homan, Homans or Mailes, have at last shed the offensive cognomen for that of Homand. This announcement was made yesterday by Mrs. Homand.

What the Hogans couldn't do in Massachusetts, even with much harangulng, they accomplished in New Hampshire with the simple signing of a paper, according to information the Globe received this morning.

When Mrs. Homand announced that she is no longer a Hogan, but a Homand, she would not state where the change in name took place. But it was learned this morning that Mr. Hogan in New Hampshire Part of the time he spent in Stafford county, just across the line and part near White River Junction, in Grafton County. It was during this time that he acquired the new name, and this fall he returned home as Homond.

When Mr. Hogan was denied a change of name last winter, after a remarkable hearing before Judge George, he announced that he would not give up the fight, but would see it through to a finish. He said that he had chosen as the Hogan slogan "The Hogan name must, go." Then he set about studying the laws of neighboring states, he told his announces a continuation of the double programme policy as inaugurated last week. This departure is in keeping with the nature of things existing in the important picture theatres of big cities. Tonight and on Tuesday the chief feature will be the Jesse E. Lasky comedy production of "Snobs," from the play by Geo. Bronson Howard, and featuring Victor Moore, one of Broadway's favorite funny men. This is a four-reel film and will be shown in addition to "The Goddess" serial and the Animated Weekly. The Great Richards is the vaudeville feature—a beautiful and mysterious act.

An agreement was entered into this morning between Thomas Raymond of Fredericton and Lewis C.
