When day broke, I had not closed my eyes; not that the situation seemed desperate, for I had learned to read Clarisse's eyes. But, all night long, I had repeated over and over again to myself:

"Heaven grant that the little hotel in the Avenue Friedland is still for sale! We would be so comfortable there,"

In spite of this, I was no further advanced when Septemb r came, the last month of my lease. I was no longer shown the door when I suggested my candidacy, but Clarisse assumed a bored air and calmly talked of something else. Between our solves, I weeld rather she rang the bell, for I divined that she was thinking:

"My dear friend, you do not displease me; quite the contrary. But you must confess that, in the solitude of Chantilly I have scarcely had opportunity to enjoy my widowhood. Let me see if it is really worthy of its reputation. In a year or two we can talk of your affair."

"A long distance from here," I hastened to reply; "at the other end of the forest, I am sure it must have taken me fully three-quarters of an hour to come here."

To be precise, it had taken me about five minutes.

Early in April she had quietly left her Paris apartment, where no male visitor had set foot since her husband's death, and it was only by accident that, a week later, I discovered the address she had so carefully concealed from everyone. It was "S. camore Villa, Chantilly." On the first of May there might have been seen to arrise at a little bit of a house, situated at a guish—but which sounded very sweet, just the same—gasped behind me: "Pulip, if you love me, do not go! They will kill you!" venient distance from Sycamore villa, several trunks, an English cart and pony, a saddle horse, a bull-terrier, two servants, and a man Lordering on thirty. That man will kill you!"

It was precisely like the fourth act of "The Huguenots," except that my name is not Raoul.

I saw the advantage of my situation, and I resolved to profit by it. I profited by it so well that, after a dialogue too intimate to be repented here, I was in a position to sing—if I had had a voice, which I haven't: "Thou ou ha-ast said it."

For she had said it. Poor Charles was was myself.

I hastened to add that, in this circumstance, I acted solely at my own risk and peril, without any authorization, any right whatever, and wi h no other motive than my love—my profound love—to prompt me to hope that my change of domicile would not be a dead loss. Ah, well—nothing venture, nothing win. And what did-I venture? The salon, the May fetes, the Grand Prix, the mob in the Alle des l'oteaux, a few balls—what were they in comparise a with the charms of a most attractive neighborhood? I have known men to cross the seas and spend fortunes to follow to the ends of the world adventageses whose whole body was not worth the tip of Mme. de Moncley's little finger. Clarisse's pretty anger when I presented myself at her house, on the day of my arrival, w.s. my first delightful recompense. She took her time about it, too, and only pushed me into the street after a regulation phillippie, to which I listened very humbly, replying only so much as was necessary to lengthen the lesture, which concluded in these words: was myself.

I hastened to add that, in this circum-For she had said it. Poor Charles was distanced now. She had said the sweet words: "I love you."

A prey to emotions bordering on the hysterical, Clarisse sobbed and clung to me with all her strength, though I had not the faintest desire to intrude on the massacre next door. They could kill themselves at their ease. Let every man tend to his own affairs. As for me, I was very much occurred in the strength of the first selections.

pied just then.
That is why, early the next morning, I hurried to my lawyer to speak to him about the little hotel in the Avenue Friedland, which was still for sale, but, thank fortune, is now no longer in the market. Decorators and furnishers are at work in it, and when January comes, you will see it occupied by a certain young couple that

But let us not anticipate. When the train pulled into the city, my companion and I had quite forgotten our neighbors, or what was left of them; but now the authorities must be informed and the bodies removed. I had jumped out, and was looking about for a sergeant de ville, when I beheld the door of the famous compartment open and the three hunters calmly descend from it, carrying, rolled up in a rug, an inert mass which looked as if it might be the hody of a young child. With-out an instant's hesitation, I seized one of the assassins by the collar.
"Scoundrel!" I cried. "What have you got in that rug?"

"Don't make such a row," he replied, "or we'll have a hundred people at our backs. It is only my poor dog."
"Dog!" I repeated, indignant at the man's coolness. "Come, come, you cannot deceive me, I saw it all." My captive, whom I still held by the to do this if my husband were still alive. And to think that he considered you his best friend! Poor Charles!"

"He has never had any cause to complain," I murmured. "Let us talk together of him."

"Never!"

"Then let us talk of ourselves, that will be better still."

My captive, whom I still held by the collar, opend a corner of the rug and showed me a setter's muzzle, with fiecks of foam on it dappled with blood. I dropped my hold on the man's collar in the greatest confusion.

"Really, I scarcely know how to apologize." I said. "But, fraukly, it is not astonishing that I should have been deceived—three men grouching on the seats of the carriage and shooting."

"Never!"

This suggestion shocked her so that it took me a long time to caim her. Finally, she did not wish to let me go without having sworn never to set foot in her house again. It is needless to say that it took alf an hour to persuade me to make this promise—which I broke the next morning and as often as possible.

I pass over the months that followed, merely declaring that in this vale of ters there is no more happy lots than that of the most adorable way of annihilating me with a look from her blue eyes—eyes that were intended for quite another purpose than annihilating—whenever she saw that I was going to fall on my knees before her, and I must confess she saw it at least ten times during every visit I made tier, still in spite of her express probibition. And when I so far forgot myself as the tell her, if the intent were as good as the deed, the late lamented ought to have a heavy grudge against "his best friend," seeing that I had loved his wife madly from the very first.

"Not another word," she would say severely; "you blaspheme against friend-wiship. Poor Charles!"

"And her white, dimpled hand would pittlessly stop my mouth, so that, if I had ollowed my inclination, I would have blasphemed from morning till night like the worst traitor to friendship in the world.

t is Pleasant to the Taste as the Sweetest Nectar. It is Safe and Harmless as the Purest Milk. This wonderful Nervine Tonic has only recently been introduced into this country by the proprietors and manufacturers of the Great South American Nervine Tonic, and yet its great value as a curative agent has long been known by a few of the most learned physicians, who have not brought its merits and value to the knowledge of the beneral public. This medicine has completely solved the problem of the cure of indigestical dyspepsia, and diseases of the general nervous system. It is also of the greatest value in the cure of all forms of failing health from whatever cause. It performs this by the great nervine tonic qualities which it possesses, and by its great curative powers upon the digestive organs, the stomach, the liver and the bowels. No remedy compares with this wonderfully valuable Nervine Tonic as a builder and strength-ener of the life forces of the human body, and as a great renewer of a broken-down constitution. It is also of more real permanent value in the treatment and cure of diseases of the lungs than any consumption remedy ever used on this continent. It is a marvelous cure for nervousness of females of all ages. Ladies who are approaching the critical period known as change in life, should not fail to use this great Nervine Tonic, almost constantly, for the space of two or three years. It will carry them safely over the danger. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied; and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This South American Nervine has been found by analysis to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its universal adaptability to the cure of all forms of nervous derangement.
