SATELLITE

Easter is coming. When in doubt, don't eat the egg.

Has April been trying to spring a little winter on us?

The men of Cork seem very buoyant over that land purchase bill.

The athletic bungalow ought to be a solid institution. It will be built on a bank.

April has made a good beginning, sunshine, rain, sleet, hail and snow, all within the first three days.

They say that a new broom sweeps clean, but the Board of Works have bought one to sweep the city pavements.

That snowstorm last week gave the Satellite a set-back in the landscape gardening he is doing to secure Mayor McKee's prize.

The Ontario Government might invent some patent preservative for snow and use when the supply of white-wash runs out.

LAW AGAINST KISSING.
Holy smoke! It's against the law, the blue law of 1794, for a man to kiss his wife on Sunday in Philadelphia.

This truly remarkable law contains these provisions:
There shall be no manner of work performed on the Sabbath day, and there shall be no bargaining, trading or other indulgence in worldly pursuits during the period designated as the Sabbath day.

No beast of burden, man servant or maid servant, shall be called upon to do any manner of labor on the Sabbath day.

No husband shall kiss his wife and no mother shall kiss her child on the Sabbath day or any day of fasting.

No person shall undertake a journey, travel, cook victuals, shave or otherwise defile the Sabbath day by other outward conduct.

No one shall run on the Sabbath day, or walk in his garden or elsewhere, except reverently, to and from his or her place of worship.

It shall be unlawful for any person to disturb the peace of the Sabbath day by indulging in unworthy and worldly conversation on the public roads on that day.

Charles J. Field, who is president of the Sabbath Observance Association of Philadelphia, has instituted legal proceedings to repeal this ancient statute. Mr. Field wishes to observe the Sabbath in a decent, reverent manner. Plainly he also wishes to kiss Mrs. Field whenever he feels like it.

Thos. Wengenheim will dispose of his household furniture, as advertised, on Tuesday, April 7th.

MYSTERY SOLVED

It is not very often there is anything to disturb the usual routine at the city waterworks, but Saturday evening was an exception. About 11:30 p. m. night engineer Jas. Herman was attending to his duties as usual when his attention was drawn to strange sounds appearing to be coming from the top of the boiler brickwork. The noise was not loud, but enough to cause him to think it was due to rats, and he paid no further attention at the time. At irregular intervals noises were heard, smothered groans, sighs and other strange sounds he thought he detected mingled with the babel of noises made by the machinery. He was now fully awakened to the fact that something mysterious was taking place on top of the brickwork. He looked upward several times when the sounds were loudest expecting to see something, and he was not disappointed. Out of the chimney darkness above the boilers he had glimpses of a dark and shadowy form that seemed to be groping about. By this time cold chills began to chase each other up and down the engineer's spine. At last he saw a face hideous in its blackness.

"Whether man or devil he could not tell.

But like a satyr straight from hell, the engineer ran and called up Mr. Murphy. This was about 12 p. m. Returning with the chief, they procured a ladder and a lamp and proceeded to investigate. Seeing a dark form at a little distance, they cautiously approached to find a drunken man crawling about on top of the brickwork, and so covered with soot and dirt that it was some time before they discovered whether he was black or white. They managed to remove him from his dangerous position, giving him a drink of water to quench his intense thirst caused by the cooking he got on the boilers. The dirt was washed off him and he was recognized as a carpenter named Bartlett belonging to the city. When questioned not much information could be got from him as to how he got onto the boilers, but he said he had been up there since Friday night. He appeared dazed and said he thought he was in Mexico when wandering about the top of the brickwork; he had been over 24 hours on top of the boilers when discovered. The police were telephoned for, but it was out of their district, so he was made as comfortable as possible on a bench till daylight, when he departed.

A STIFF BATTLE.

Entrapped Insurgents Inflicted Heavy Losses.

Sofia, Bulgaria, via London, April 6.—After an adventurous journey across Macedonia, from Salonica, by horse and trap, during which I have passed through the most dangerous dominions of the Albanians and Bulgarians, I have returned to Sofia with detailed information of the outbreak of hostilities. It was my good fortune to be on the ground when the Albanians made their first protest in force against the institution of the reforms demanded by the powers and sanctioned by the Sultan. The scene is now filled with dramatic tales and accounts of the renewal of fighting by the resentful Albanians, but these come from irresponsible sources and are enmeshed with contradictions. I can at least give a clear account of what I witnessed and investigated at Uskub, Istip and Mitrovia.

The enlistment of Christian gendarmes began in the village of Mitrovia about the middle of March. Thirteen Christians had taken the chances of the service in order to test the efficacy of the reforms, enlisting in the little town of Vuchitryn, not far from the railway line leading from Nioch to Salonica. About three thousand Albanians took action so secretly that even the natives of their own race in the village were surprised. The object of their conspiracy was to murder the Bulgarian gendarmes. They entered the village suddenly on March 29, but the gendarmes received warning a few minutes before they appeared, and fled to Presren, with the Albanians in hot pursuit. Only one Bulgarian was overtaken, and he was killed with bullets. The Albanians spared the villagers, and marched toward Mitrovia, a town nearly a Serbian frontier, where they threatened not long ago to kill the Consuls. Whether they would have taken decisive action against them if they had entered the town is a matter for conjecture. They were not allowed to follow the Serbian gendarmes, and the foreign Consulates. Two regiments of Turkish troops, with hundreds of guns, blocked their passage in the mountain pass.

The Turkish Governor at Istip learned through spies that a large amount of ammunition for distribution in the neighborhood had arrived at Grabritza, a hamlet of fifty shepherd's houses. Under his orders two companies of Turkish soldiers, two hundred strong, were despatched from Istip to search the village. They ransacked every house, tore open every mattress and pulled up the floors, frightening women and children, but not accomplishing any other result. As the soldiers moved in a body from house to house a band of Macedonians who had brought in arms and ammunition crept out of sight. When the search was ended a bugle was sounded, as the Turkish commander subsequently explained, in order to form the men in line for the return march to Istip. The troops happened to collect directly below the last house, in which the Macedonians had taken refuge. Thinking that the bugle was a signal for a general attack, and expecting that they could hold their position until they could retreat by dashing through the lines, let loose a volley. Three Turks fell dead and several were wounded. The remaining soldiers retired to positions of safety behind haystacks and rocks. The Turks formed a cordon about the house which the Bulgarians were holding, and kept up a rapid, withering fire, until a full regiment could be brought up to Istip. A demand was then made for a surrender, to which the little garrison replied in their own picturesque language, which, freely translated, meant: "No Turkish dungeon for us. It will cost you ten to one.

The fight had begun at 10 o'clock in the morning, and at nightfall the firing from the little rock house was almost as vigorous as at the outset, yet the Bulgarians had lost nineteen of their number, and had not been able to give water to their dying companions. The attack around and many wooden houses had been destroyed by being set on fire by dynamite bombs flung from the rock fortress at the Turkish troops. The ground around the house had been cleared in this way, and the Turks had fallen back toward the mountain. The eighteen survivors made a sortie under cover of the darkness, when the scene was only faintly lighted by the smouldering embers of the haystacks and ruined houses. Armed with bombs with which they intended to attack their adversaries and then break through the lines, they crept up with the utmost caution, but were discovered prematurely. The bombs fell short; the cordon was too strong to be cut by swords, and after seven had fallen the remaining Bulgarians again took refuge in the stone house. I asked the commander of the Turkish forces at Istip how serious their losses had been in this combat. He replied grimly, "Four or five men." The Turkish officials made strenuous efforts to prevent investigation, but I learned from the Bulgarians in the villages near the scene that the conflict had cost the regular forces reached nearly a hundred.

THE KING'S VISIT.

A Blow to the Schemes of the German Emperor.

London, April 6.—Immense significance is attached to the forthcoming visits of the King to Rome and Paris. One paper goes so far as to declare that the King's tour spells annihilation of the German Emperor's ambitious schemes, as Germany could never dream of risking a quarrel either with Britain or the United States unless the connivance of Italy and the neutrality of France were secured.

Yonkers, N.Y., April 4.—It was reported at the home of Clara Morris, here last night that the actress had another sinking spell, and while it was expected she would rally, there was practically no hope of her ultimate recovery. She will apparently be in a invalid for the remainder of her life.

OUR NORTHWEST.

Yesterday was Emergency Missionary Sunday in the Methodist churches of the city, for the purpose of obtaining a special fund for extra-mission work in consequence of the rush of population into New Ontario, the Northwest and British Columbia. The amount asked from the Methodist Church in Eastern Canada is $50,000. Rev. John McDougall, Superintendent of Indian Missions and Schools, in the Manitoba and Northwest Methodist Conference, occupied the pulpit of Park St. Methodist Church in the morning and Victoria Ave. in the evening. In the morning, in his address, he took the congregation on an imaginary trip to Western Canada, stopping for a while at Banff. Banff, he said, was Canada's National Park, and a wonderful gift of God. He described Vermilion Pass with its beauties, how it originated from the time the first Buffalo went over it till the coming of the white man.

In 1870 Mr. McDougall, as ambassador and scout, prepared the way for the Mounted Police.

Mr. McDougall spoke to some length on the new people coming into the west, and the work the church has to do.

Rev. Mr. Long, Dr. Stephenson and Mr. McDougall made addresses in the Sunday schools during the afternoon. In the evening Rev. Mr. Long and Dr. Stephenson occupied the pulpit of Park St. Church and Rev. Mr. McDougall the pulpit of Victoria Ave.

Mr. Long spoke of his twelve years' experience in the west. Western Canada, Mr. Long said, was our native heritage. He also made mention of New Ontario, its minerals and forests, as yet practically undiscovered.

The trans-continental, the Grand Trunk Pacific, would be a means of opening the new country.

Although the western country is wild and but sparsely settled, law and honor are upheld by the Mounted Police, of whom Canada ought to be proud.

"What we wish to do with these new settlers," concluded Mr. Long, "is first to turn them into good Canadian subjects and in so doing we will Christianize them."

Dr. Stephenson gave some statistics and made a short address. A quartette, composed of Misses Hill and White and Messrs. Gilleland and Miller, rendered a selection very pleasingly.
