thirty of the pupils took part, save evi-dence of fine vocal training. The instru-mental ducts Flows & Oranger and Trom-cay Galos, played by Misses J. Mulligan, E. Booney, J. Puppere and A. Bojotte were performed with great excellence. A French dialogue, Les Bergers, was very nicely given by Misses J. Rejotte and L. Martin. Misses Julia and Maggie Heenan contributed to the programme three numbers, an instrumental duct (plano) Revel du Loon, a duct entitled Rhogesis Hongoris (plano and violin) and a plano sole Fantase. The brilliant talents of the Misses Heenan require no press recognition-

Respective Homoroise (piano and violin) and a piano solo Fantesie. The beilliant talents of the Misses Hoenan require no press recognition-suffice it to my that they are both gredu-stes of the far-famed Convent of Ville Marie, Montreal, and double gold med-dallists in the departments of music and literature. Miss Julis Heenan is unques tionably the finest planist of the Ottawa Valley. An English dialogue, in which the following young ladies scquitted themselves with credit, close the pro-gramme: Memory, Miss M. K. angy; Imagination, Miss M. Mellon; Intelligence, Miss I. Poupore; Will, Miss E. Rooney; Judgment, Miss C. O'Meara; Heart, Miss H. Killmartin. At the close His Lord-ship Dr. Lorrain addressed the parents and pupils in a bappy manner, expressing his gratification at the talent displayed by the young ladies and thanking the Nuns and pupils for this mark of esteem as shown in the beautiful programme of music and literature with which he had been so pleasantly entertained.

BRANTFORD NOTES.

Father Lennon recently gave missions in Elora, Fergus, and another parish in that section. The Minister of Education was in the

all the educational institutions of the city last week. Before leaving he visited all the educational institutions of the city. At the Collegiate Institute he complimented the staff on the position their school had attained in the Ontario complimented the staff on the position their school had attained in the Ontario school system. At the separate school he seemed most highly pleased. He expressed surprise and pleasure at the appearance and adaptability of the school building, as well as at the number usually passed into the Collegists Insti-tute. The pupils all presented a neat and bright appearance, and on the Min-ister's entrance to the school one of the boys made a little speech of welcome. Hon, Mr. Ross was accompanied by a number of prominent gentlemen, who all paid a high compliment to the appearance of the school. We are to have a lecture from Justin McCarthy on the 19th in the Opera-House, on the British House of Commons. He comes under the auspices of the Star Courst Committee. Doubtless a large house will greet him, as has been the is pretty well known here, no less than four of his novelis and all ot his historical works being on the shelves of our free public library. It is not likely that many Brantford Irishmen will lose a chance of seeing and hearing one whom Mr. Par-nell pronounced the foremost Irishman of his day. The maintenance of the John H. Stratford Hospital for the first year coat $4,28445. There were 194 admitted during the year; 153 discharged; 16 deathe; 20 in at date of report. 146 were Protestante; 37 Catholics; 11 not known. After an outburst on be thrilling, this anything but rever-end exborter said (as reported in the daily Saratogias). "It seemed sometimes as though we all could hear the voice of God's diakonored Son calling to us, in the words of the beleding chieftain, Me-Gregor, 'I am not dead, my friends; but I am watching to see if you are doing your duty." From the purely literary point of view, this presents probably the most grotesque anti climax yet recorded. As to the execrable taste, the outrageous irreverence and the ludicrous iddicy of such an utterance, it can only be said that there is but one place for the min our day. Mr. Leach rightfully belongs in the Salvation Army, though it is of God quoting the "bleeding chieftain McGregor." One is almost tempted to wand that there might be some sort of censorship of the pulpit for such wittess men as this. A SACREED VEIL:

village in which the church stood was a small one, and there was every chance that the magnificent prize might be carried off in one bold dash. They feared to make the attempt at night, as the country was mountainous and the roads wretchedly unace, so that a fast exceps in the dark would be out of the question. It was about 3 o'clock in the afternoon that they made the effort. The church, as is the custom, was open and only a couple of old women were inside. Two of the three me walked quietly in, the third holding the horses, and in less time than it takes to write the words the veil was in their possession and they were galloping across the hillaids. The alarm was raised before they were clear of the village, and a pursuing party at once began the chase. It was a ride for life, for the Mericans would con-sider the profanation of a church a worse crime than the robbery. Both sides had good horses, but the native held a little advantage from their knowledge of the country. One short cut brought them almost in range of Weyer and his friends, and a volley was fired, but without result. The man who was carrying the veil rode in the lead, and the others bringing up the rear. They had thus gone for nearly an hour when they came to a narrow part of the road scooped out of the hillida, and as their horses were completely blown they determined to make a stand and try to fight the Mericans off. It was a natural sort of a fortification, which they made stronger in a few minutes by rolling together a lot of loose stones. The skirmish began immediately afterward and was sharp and bitter. The pursuers were held off for a time, but a couple of them climbed up the hillside and rolled great stones down at the little knot of robbers. Most of these went over the heads of the Germans and rumbled and thundered down the canyon, but one stone, more incredible, he got away and successfully eluded pursuit. The veil was recovered held whe these chasm, taking the veil with him. Weyer held his desperate position untit darkness came, and
