THEN young Miss Housewife first aspired, to build the home her mate desired, she dreamed of castles in the air, with never toil nor woe nor care. She half imagined. in a way, that keeping house was only "play."

The Art of Dirt Chasing

100 lb. Cloth Bags.

Too soon the sordid side of life-the dust and grime and soot and strife-each one, in turn, reminded her, that little problems must occur. A part of thrift is in the knack of fighting dirt around you, back; of keeping constantly at work where dust and germs of illness lurk.

This housewife had her little cry, gave up—and scarcely knowing why. Then, from the sombre clouds of doubt, two rays of golden hope crept out. The Gold Dust

Twins threw wide the door and entered, eager for a chore. They polished all the silverware, they scrubbed the bathroom and the Each mirror soon was shining bright, the kettles shone with gleaming light, and all around. from pit to dome, they garnished up that little home.

Ah! Ye who feel that, once begun, a house-wife's work is NEVER done, have cheer! The Gold Dust Twins make play of any task that comes their way. A mop-a cloth-a busy brush, and honestly it makes us blush, to think we ever played the drone by working in the house alone.

THE RETURN OF TARZAN

By EDGAR RICE BURROUGHS

CHAPTER VIII.

The Fight In the Desert. ROM below came the sound of voices, quite distinguishable upon the still night air. Tarzan could not understand the words, but Abdul and the girl trans-

"They have gone now," said the lat-"It is you they want, m'sleur. One of them said that the stranger who had offered money for your slaying lay in the house of Akmed din Soulef with a broken wrist, but that he bad offered a still greater reward if some would lay in wait for you upon the road to Bou Saada and kill you."

"It is he who followed m'sieur about the market today," exclaimed Abdul. "I saw him again within the cafehim and another-and the two went out into the inner court after talking with this girl here. It was they who attacked and fired upon us as we came out of the cafe. Why do they wish to kill you, m'sieur?"

"I do not know," replied Tarzan, and then, after a pause, "unless"- But he did not finish, for the thought that had come to his mind, while it seemed the only reasonable solution of the mystery, appeared at the same time quite improbable.

Presently the men in the street went away. The courtyard and the cafe were deserted. Cautiously Tarzan lowered himself to the sill of the girl's window. The room was empty. He returned to the roof and let Abdul down; then he lowered the girl to the arms of the waiting Arab.

From the window Abdul dropped the short distance to the street below, while Tarzan took the girl in his arms and leaped down as he had done on so many other occasions in his own forest with a burden in his arms. A little cry of alarm was started from the girl's lips, but Tarzan landed in the street with but an imperceptible jar and lowered her in safety to her feet. She clung to him for a moment.

"How strong monsieur is and how active!" she cried. "El adrea, the black lion, himself is not more so."

"I should like to meet this el adres of yours," he said. "I have heard much about him."

"And you come to the douar of my father you shall see him." said the girl. "He lives in a spur of the mountains north of us and comes down from his lair at night to rob my father's douar. With a single blow of his mighty paw he crushes the skull of a bull, and woe betide the helated wayfarer who meets el adrea abroad at

Without further mishap they reached the hotel and sent a messenger for Kadour ben Saden. They had waited perhaps half an hour when the mes senger returned with the old sheik. He entered the room with a questioning expression upon his proud face.

"Monsieur has done me the honor to"- he commenced, and then his eyes fell upon the girl. With outstretched arms he crossed the room to meet her. "My daughter!" he cried. "Allah is merciful?" And tears dimmed the and workmen. The men will be laid martial eyes of the old warrior.

her final rescue had been told to Kadour ben Saden he extended his hand

"All that is Kadour ben Saden's is thine, my friend, even to his life," he said very simply, but Tarzan knew that these were no idle words.

Early next morning the party was ham, near here, has been advised by on its way south toward Bou Saada. For a few miles the road was good im $50,000 for a card game which and they made rapid progress, but suddenly it became only a waste of sand, Kearney whiled away his spare time into which the horses sank fetlock ith a deck of cards. It is said that the game Aissa. Thus, seven guns strong, they entertained little fear of attack by day, and if all went well they should reach Bou Saada before nightfall. But soon Abdul announced that they were being followed by six horsemen.

"At the next village I shall remain and question these gentlemen while you ride on," said Tarzan.

"If you stop we shall stop," said Kadour ben Saden. "Until you are safe with your friends or the enemy has with your friends or the enemy has ted, Druggist, Brantford, or sent postpaid (price $1.00). Write Tremain Supply Co., Dept. 52, Toronto. you. There is nothing more to say." Tarzan but nodded his head. He was a man of few words, and possibly it was for this reason as much as any that Kadour ben Saden had taken to him, for if there be one thing that an Arab despises it is a talkative man. All the balance of the day Abdul caught glimpses of the horsemen in their rear. They remained always at about the same distance. During the occasional halts for rest and at the longer halt at noon they approached "They are waiting for darkness," said Kadour ben Saden. And darkness came before they reached Bou Saada. The pursuing borsemen rapidly closed up the distance that intervened between them and their intended quarry. Abdul whispered this fact to Tarzan, for he did not wish to alarm the girl. The ape-man drew back beside him. "You will ride ahead with the others, Abdul," said Tarzan. "This is my quarrel. I shall wait at the next convenient spot and interview these fel-

"Then Abdul shall wait at thy side," eplied the young Arab, nor would any threats or commands move him from

"Very well, then," replied Tarzan. "Here is as good a place as we could wish. Here are rocks at the top of this hillock. We shall remain hidden here and speak with the gentlemen." They drew in their horses and dismounted. The others, riding ahead. were already out of sight in the darkness. Beyond them shone the lights of Bou Saada. Tarzan removed his rifle from, its boot and loosened his revolver in its holster. He ordered Abdul to withdraw behind the rocks with the horses so that they would be shielded from the enemies' bullets should they fire. The young Arab pretended to do as he was bid, but when he had fastened the two animals securely to a low shrub he crept back to lie on his belly a few paces behind Tarzan.

The ape-man stood erect in the middle of the road, waiting. Nor did he have long to wait. The sound of galloping horses came suddenly out of the darkness below him, and a moment tater he discerned the moving blotches of lighter color against the solid back ground of the night. "Halt." he cried. "or we fire!"

The white figures came to a sudden stop, and for a moment there was silence. Abdul raised himself to one knee. Tarzan cocked his jungle mined ears, and presently there came to him the sound of horses walking quietly through the sand to the east of him, to the west, to the north and to the south. They had been surrounded. Then a shot came from the direction in which he was looking. A bullet whirred through the air above his head, and he fired at the flash of the enemy's gun.

Instantly the soundless waste was torn with the quick staccato of guns upon every hand. Abdul and Tarzan fired only at the flashes. They could not yet see their foemen. But one came too close, for Tarzan was accustomed to using his eyes in the darkness of the jungle night, than which there is no more utter darkness this side the grave, and with a cry of pain a saddle was emptied.

"The odds are evening, Abdul," said Tarzan, with a low laugh.

But they were still far too one sided. and when the five remaining horsemen whirled at a signal and charged full upon them it looked as if there would be a sudden ending of the battle. Both Tarzan and Abdul sprang to the shelter of the rocks that they might keep the enemy in front of them. There was a mad clatter of galloping hoofs, a volley of shots from both sides, and the Arabs withdrew to repeat the maneuver, but there were now only four against the two.

From one direction came the sound of a new charge. But scarcely had the first gun spoken ere a dozen shots rang out behind the Arabs. There came the wild shouts of a new party to the controversy and the pounding of the feet of many horses from down the road to Bou Saada.
