Flying the Atlantic.

(From the Toronto Star.)

Interest in the project of flying across the Atlantic is heightened in Toronto this week by the presence in the city of Colonel Raymond Collishaw, the famous Canadian ace, who is being dined to-night by the local Aero Club. Among those interested in aviation there is a pretty general feeling that if somebody can at this stage in the flying game cross the ocean in an aeroplane Colonel Collishaw in a Handley-Page can do it. Not only is young Collishaw one of the greatest of aviators, but he was a sailor before the war, and the ocean was his highway. It is probable that several attempts will be made to capture the $50,000 prize offered by the London Daily Mail. But the flight across the ocean is so big a task, not only because it is so long a stretch of flying, but owing to the difficulty in keeping direction in changing winds, that it does not follow that the first competitor to make the start will be the winner. The winner will be the one who makes soundest preparations and who encounters the most propitious conditions. The editor of London Opinion suggests that there may come a surprise in this competition. He hints that there is always a chance of some comparatively small firm taking a long shot "and getting across with a fast single-seater without any preparations at all." He hears that one or more such attempts are likely to be made. Nothing nowadays can be dismissed as impossible, but we should say that the likelihood of a single-seater making the journey successfully is exceedingly improbable. Such a machine could not carry enough petrol, one man would not be equal to the sustained effort as pilot, not to speak of studying maps and charts and using wireless. With a straight well-marked path, or great good luck, a fast two-seater might fly it. The chances are all in favor of a large, well-equipped machine. It is quite possible that an airship may cross the Atlantic before an aeroplane does so. But that would be another matter, and would not detract from the interest taken in what aeroplanes can do.

Notwithstanding Act of Parliament.

(From the Morning Chronicle.)

According to the press despatches the larger cities and the principal industries of Canada will run on Daylight Saving Time on their own account during the summer. If this is generally followed it will tend to minimize the confusion which will arise from the railways being operated on the Daylight saving system.

A Pound of Whale, Please.

A little more than a year ago, when the meat shortage in this country was at its worst, a correspondent wrote to a London daily paper pointing out that whale flesh was every bit as good as beef, and that one whale carcass contained enough meat to feed a good-sized city for a week.

Now it turns out that in the United States they have eaten something over a thousand whales during the past season, and that the people on that side have acquired a real taste for whale beef.

A whale weighs about a ton for each foot of length—that is a fifty-foot whale weighs fifty tons, and of this gross weight rather more than one-fifth is good meat. So a fifty-foot whale yields ten tons of beef, as well as a huge quantity of excellent oil. The best part of the whale meat is the tongue. The heart is also good food.

One great advantage of whale beef over ox beef is that the meat is always wholesome. It would appear that the whale is not subject to the diseases suffered by land animals. The whale, it must be remembered, is not a fish but a warm-blooded mammal that produces its young alive, and suckles them as does a cow or mare.

The Japanese have long known the value of whale meat as food, and would never dream of wasting any part of the carcass of the huge beast. They have established regular whale fisheries off Saghalien Island and further north. The Indians of Alaska and the native tribes of the peninsula of Kamtschatka also eat whale whenever they can get it.

The flesh of all varieties, except of the "orca" or killer whale, appears to be edible, but the best meat comes from the gray whale and from the so-called "sulphur bottom" variety.

Factories for preserving and canning whale flesh are being established on the shores of the North Pacific.

What Mother Said.

(From Farm and Home—British.)

The Squire's Pretty Daughter (examining the village school)—"Now, children can you tell me what a miracle is?" The children looked at one another, but remained silent. "Can no one answer this question?" the new curate asked, who was standing behind the squire's daughter. A little girl was suddenly struck with a brilliant idea. She held up her hand excitedly. "Well, Nellie?" the squire's daughter asked, smiling approval. "Please, miss," the small child replied, breathlessly, "mother says 'twill be a miracle if you don't marry the new curate.'"

PEACE AND SAFETY FIRST CONSIDERATION.
CAPE TOWN, April 7.
(Via Reuters' Ottawa Agency.)—The debate on the second reading of the enemies' repatriation bill was resumed Saturday. Sir Thomas Smart, leader of the opposition, emphasized the necessity of the Government taking whatever steps were requisite for the safety and peace of the state. He was prepared to make liberal exceptions in the direction of not touching peaceful and law-abiding enemy aliens, but he contended none should be allowed to remain in the country who might be a danger in the future.

Sir Thomas also questioned the contention of Sir Thomas Watt, Minister of the Interior, made in March last, that the Immigration Act gave sufficient power to exclude enemy subjects inasmuch as in his opinion the definition of sedition in the Act did not include violent and incendiary speeches, which in view of the presence of millions of natives, might become a serious danger. He therefore advocated the registration of aliens, at the same time emphasizing that he did not desire any sternly repressive measures. He was aware that the House voted unanimously the amnesty bill of 1914 for the rebels, but he said that the peace and safety of the country should be the first consideration.

Obituary.

MRS. ELIZABETH PYN.

There passed peacefully away yesterday morning, at her residence, 65 McFarlane Street, Elizabeth Taylor, daughter of Sarah and the late Robert Taylor an beloved wife of John Pyn. Deceased had been suffering from Bronchitis for upwards of a year, but she was not expected, until about two weeks ago, when complications set in. The late Mrs. Pyn was in her 57th year, and is survived by an aged mother, who in less than six months has been called to mourn the loss of two daughters, also two sisters, Mrs. Lawrence Green, and Miss Mary Taylor, and one brother Harry Taylor, all residing in this city. Deceased was a woman of christian character and passed away in the certain hope of life eternal. Much sympathy is felt for the sorrowing relatives.

"Not now but in the coming years, it may be in the better land; We'll know the meaning of our tears, And then sometime we'll understand."

An Awkward Question.

Speaking at a luncheon recently, Lord George Wellesley told the following story as illustrating how the British working classes are determined to have their proper share of the good things of life.

I was present some little while back (he said) at a lecture given by a lady in the East End of London on cheap and tasty dishes for the poor. She said:

"My next dish is boiled cod's head. A cod's head properly prepared makes an excellent dinner for poor people."

"Take a cod's head, put it in a saucepan, add salt, onions, and—"

"Just one moment, ma'am," interrupted a little woman wearing a blue bow tie. "What some of us here would like to know is—who gets the cod?"

Our Lost Sunlight.

If the vote in the House of Commons on the Daylight Saving Resolution is to be regarded as final and decisive, Canada will be deprived during the coming summer of this great economic and health-keeping boon. With the single exception of Canada, all the countries which adopted it are continuing it. As far as the debate is reported, the objections of those who opposed it in the House are not of a very weighty character. In fact, the explanation of the rejection of Daylight Saving seems to be that most of the members were content to deprive the people of the boon of an extra hour of sunshine rather than that they should take the risk of losing a few votes. But, a reform so generally beneficial to the workers of the Dominion, will not be permanently defeated. It is bound to win in the long run.

It is quite true that farmers have strenuously objected to its re-enactment, but even in the objections were more substantial than they appear to be, the benefit of an additional hour of sunshine to the great industrial masses of the country would more than overcome the slight disadvantages which the farmer might suffer. The experience of all countries which have tried daylight saving is that it has been of value in increasing efficiency and in creating a happier and better spirit among the workers. Better still, it has been of great health-giving benefit. We are realizing more and more that the health of the people is not only of vital but of the first importance. We cannot build up a great nation unless we have a people sound in body as well as in mind, and nothing will contribute more to wholesome living, than the free air and golden sunshine of the outdoors. Sunshine is one of God's greatest gifts to mankind. It is a conservator of health and a builder of character.

Bags and Baggage.

"The news from Paris marks, sumably, the final triumph of the campaign which Mr. Gladstone conducted more than forty years ago says the Daily News.

"Time has confirmed the wisdom, as well as the justice of his impassioned appeal, and there will be few to-day the passing of Turkey.

"For Europe and the world, Turk's power and his impotence have been almost equally a menace and a curse. It is high time that he should disappear. The plan proposed by the Committee seems in its outlines right and sensible. The internationalizing of Constantinople as we have always urged, the true solution of this problem. The restoration of the Asiatic littoral Greece is an act of historic justice—a recognition of the facts of population in the centre of the peninsula, the people are Mohammedan, an equally fair application of the same broad principle."
