"Those men," said Sir John, after he had peppered Mr. Targett a bit more, "went to Hon. Mr. Coaker and were told that nothing could be done for them." He would advise the Hon. Minister to use some of the balance of the allocation to pay those unfortunates in Trinity Bay who were waiting for their money. The fish regulations were the greatest curse Newfoundlanders had ever had perpetrated on them. People who might have been in a position to supply to-day had been prevented from doing so by had regulations and bad advice from the Advisory Board. The regulations brought disaster not only to the outports but even to all parts of St. Joha's. We would never survive it. We were in such deep water that it would take such deep water that it would take all the best heads of the country, un-ted, to lift us out. He had entered thr
