The bribed guard called her by name from the common-room of the gaol, where she was herded with about twenty other women. Such a summons, as a rule, meant but one thing, immediate death by shooting, and Mrs. Marsh came out resigned to her fate. Instead, however, of being conducted to the countyard where the executions took place, she was taken to a room where, lying in the corner, she saw a dark green shawl and a shabby hat, with two slips of paper attached. One of them was a pass in an unknown name, stating that the holder had entered the building at four o'clock and must leave before seven. The other had scrawled on it the words: "Walk straight into St. Izaac's Cathedral."
