Big Price for Eel Grass

Yesterday the Minister of Agriculture and Mines received a message from the High Commissioner at London, stating that the shipment of eel grass, which was forwarded in September, had been sold at $12 per ton, and that one firm had three repeat orders and required further quantities. The shipment referred to is an experiment on the part of the Minister of Agriculture to test the possibilities of making the export of eel grass a profitable industry. Under the direction of Mr. J. F. Downey, about 20 tons of the grass was collected and packed for shipment at Swift Current, near Sound Island, P.E.I. Nearly an ton of the lot was forwarded and as is indicated by the message, a very profitable figure was secured for it. Owing to the congestion of freight on the Argyle the balance of the twenty tons has not yet been sent on here for transshipment as was hoped. It is possible, however that arrangements may be made to have it forwarded in time to be sent over by S.S. Newfoundland. The experiment has demonstrated that a profitable business awaits the development by private enterprise, and it is estimated that an industry worth two or three million dollars can be established as the supply is almost inexhaustible and the demand great.

Slightly Mixed

The Earl of Oxford and Asquith, who celebrated his seventy-third birthday recently, made his reputation at the Bar by his work as junior to Sir Charles Russell, counsel for the Irish Nationalist party during the sittings of the Parnell Commission. An amusing story of this time, which throws rather a lurid light on American newspaper methods in the old days, is told by Mr. T. P. O'Connor. He relates that an American editor wished to publish a portrait of Piggott, the forger who was exposed during the inquiry. None was available, so the enterprising American simply took an old photograph from "stock," and presented it to his readers as that of the notorious Piggott. Still more sensational was the action of an Irish-American paper at the time of the trial of O'Donnell for shooting James Carey, the informer who had betrayed his associates, the murderers of Lord Frederick Cavendish and Mr. Burke, in the Phoenix Park, Dublin. O'Donnell was defended by Russell, and the Irish-American Journal praised the great lawyer most warmly for his handling of the defence. Then it attacked the judge, and suggested that it would be a "patriotic act" for some Irishman to deal with him as O'Donnell had dealt with Carey. In case anyone was disposed to do this, the editor thoughtfully published a photograph which he said was that of the judge. In reality it was a photograph of Russell.

The Railway Tie Problem

In reference to the recent conference between the Department of Agriculture and Mines and the operators of the different timber industries, and the discussion over supplying ties for the Railway, it is learned that the management of the latter can fill their requirements for this year independent of the operators. As operating companies make provision in May and June for the coming year, they were unable this season to assist in supplying the ties needed, and it was decided that a meeting place next May at Grand Falls, when the matter will receive attention.

A New Industry Coming

PROPOSITION TO MANUFACTURE ARTIFICIAL SILK.

We learn that most reliable financial parties are now in negotiation with the Government and Department of Agriculture and Mines with a view to establishing a new industry, that of manufacturing silk from wood fabric. The party in question has valuable timber lands north on which he has already expended several hundred thousand dollars. In the new enterprise he has the backing of well-known American financiers. The artificial silk industry has grown to tremendous proportions in England and there is no reason why this country cannot get a large share of the business, as manufacturing conditions here are more favourable than anywhere else.

A Counter to Land Grabbing Protest

A couple of days ago delegations from Torbay and vicinity came to the city and made protest with the authorities against what they termed "land-grabbing" in their vicinity. This morning another delegation representing those who were claiming the lands in question, called at the Crown Lands office with a counter protest, alleging that those who were opposed to the granting of the lands were already in possession of timber areas which they held in reserve, whilst they took their requirements from the crown lands.

The Artillery Memorial

England in its long history has had many war memorials, but the new Artillery Memorial at Hyde Park differs in form and sentiment from the memorials of other wars. The difference in the approach of the designers in the past were usually the works of middle-aged sculptors, who know nothing about war and its realities but were familiar with the classical rhetoric of victory and mourning. Mr. Jagger, the sculptor of the gunners' memorial, served and was wounded in the trenches, and Mr. Lionel Pearson, the architect served also in the war. There are now several memorials in sculpture and in paint done by the young men who fought in the war; this is the most important and significant of them.

Some people criticise the design as the glorification of war, but it is not that. The gun, of course, dominates the monument, but the scenes in this relief and the four bronze figures give it a terrible significance that is not the old-fashioned hymn to the weapon—something very far from Kipling and Henley. The sweating, straining, suffering men and beasts in the panels have a passionate realism, and the children of a future age will see in them war without the gloss. The bronze figure in the cloak, with the arms outstretched and resting on a shelf of the plinth, carries in his gesture the suggestion of mankind on a scaffolded cross. A resurgent figure lies at the northern end.

Different meanings will be read in this as in all genuine works of art. One meaning that came to me was that the great gun was the symbol of all war in that, once war was started, nothing could stop the doom related in the statuary below, just as nothing could stop what would come from a howitzer once the lever was pulled.

Magistrate's Court

Two drunks were discharged.

A man convicted of a breach of Section 14, Sub-section 5 of the Alcoholic Liquors Act, was fined $200 or 12 months imprisonment, on the first case for non-surrender, was withdrawn.

The postponed case of the Board of Liquors Control vs. the Proprietress of a West End store occupied the attention of the court all morning. The accused was charged with a breach of Section 15, Sub-section (B) of the Alcoholic Liquors Act, that is, that she secured from the Controller's store more than one bottle of liquor a day. Six similar charges which had been made against the defendant on the first day were withdrawn. Mr. W. J. Brown, B.L., appeared on behalf of his client and entered a plea of "not guilty." Mr. R. A. Parsons for the Board of Liquors Control opened the case by calling Mr. Bourne, a clerk at the West End Controller's, who in his evidence stated that the defendant visited the West End department on Saturday morning, Nov. 14th, and purchased one bottle of rum at $1.50. A record of the sale was made and a slip was produced with witness's own identification mark. It read: "L.G. $1.50. I.G. meant quality of liquor purchased. The slip was then put underneath cash register, with others, and was forwarded to head office on Monday. Witness stated another woman was in company with defendant on the same morning, who also purchased one bottle of rum. He could not remember the parties name, but knew that the slip was with the others filed that same day. The two bottles of rum were then wrapped up in one parcel and delivered to defendant.

Thos. J. Walsh of the Central store, was next called and swore that the defendant visited his department on the same day, Nov. 14th, and purchased a bottle of liquor, giving her name as Mrs. John Squires, Duckworth St. In this case the slip was marked by witness: "L.R. $1.50, and dated Nov. 15th. Witness recognized the defendant as the party who bought the liquor on the day in question. On being further examined witness did not know if her real name was Squires, but he pointed out to the court that she wore on that same morning a peculiar kind of shoe, laced on the tops, but could not describe whether they were a gaiter or long rubber. He could not be sure as to whether another lady was with her on that occasion.

This concluded the Crown case. Mr. Browne then called the defendant, and on being placed on the stand, she admitted having bought one bottle of rum at the West End Controller's on Nov. 14th, but stoutly denied that she purchased anything from the Central Department. She wore a low shoe with a low over rubber, and only visited the latter department, once in awhile. She swore positively that she had only visited there on one occasion this present month. She said that Mr. Walsh served her the last time, but could not remember the day or date.

On being cross-examined by Mr. Parsons, witness was put through a most searching examination but nothing could be revealed from her that she was the party who bought the liquor at the Central Store on the day in question. After all the evidence had been heard, the Counsel then took time in addressing the court. Mr. Brown asked for a dismissal on the grounds that the evidence of Walsh at the Central Store, was not corroborated by any other official of the same department. His Honor in summing up reviewed the evidence for and against, and the difficulty, he said, was who he was to believe. Under the evidence submitted, he gave the defendant the benefit of the doubt and dismissed the case. Then followed a second charge against the defendant, by the Board of Liquor Control, that she did commit a breach of Section 25, of the Alcoholic Liquors Act, that is, that she sold liquor at her store on Water Street within the past two months. Mr. Brown also defended his client in this case and entered a plea of "not guilty." The first witness for the prosecution was Detective Lee, who stated that he was instructed to visit defendants store in company with two other officers. The premises were visited in the afternoon by Saturday, November 14th. The proprietress was not present at the time, but a man was found in charge. Witness with the other officers then searched the place and found eight bottles of rum with Controller's label on same, in a cupboard, in a room at the rear of the shop. There was also another bottle found on the premises, only partly filled, but this was claimed to be the property of the man in charge. Witness was sent there by Head Constable Byrne on the complaint that liquor had been sold at the store. There was nothing else found on the premises. He found two bottles of rum done up in one package, while the balances were single, all of which bore the Controller's label. The store consisted of confectionery, soft drinks, etc., and only one glass was found in the room. At this juncture further hearing was taken until Saturday afternoon.

Record Attendance at Circus

Despite the records previously established, last night's attendance at the Prince's Rink beat all previous records. Long before the appointed hour all galleries were filled and standing room on the main floor was at a premium. The Pattersons opened the act, followed by Ringling. Afterwards came the favorite Marie (the singing girl on the web); then the Paists, in their marvellous act; the Pattersons won unstinted applause, as did Margaret New in her singing act. Prof. Wilson's circus, at a comedy act evoked unstinted applause. Despite his injury, after falling from the roof of the Prince's Rink, Mr. Ringling with his foot encased in plaster of Paris mounted his aerial despite the advice of the War Vets physician, Dr. J. St. P. Knight, and did a splendid turn. Unfortunately, however, it will be Monday before he can "boogie" his "Glow Act" in which he figured (anonymously) from a circus viewpoint) in the opening performance.

Secret of Gold Location Died With Trapper

TELEGRAPH CREEK, B.C., Nov. 20.—T. H. Kinder, a veteran prospector, died near here while searching for hidden gold and with him died the secret of where the treasure was planted.

It is a romantic story and pathetic one, the search for hidden gold by Kinder, who died perhaps only a few days or a few hours before finding the long sought fortune that would have made him wealthy and fulfilled his dreams of many years. Harry Johnson, a trapper on the Naas River, was one of the few men who was told the story by Kinder, but even he does not know the location of the hidden gold. Probably it will never be found, for Kinder was the only man who knew the secret and he is dead.

In 1897 three prospectors started for Dawson by way of the Overland route through Hazelton. They lost their way and landed at the headquarters of the Stikine River. They commenced prospecting here and struck rich pay. They took about sixty pounds of gold altogether before striking out over the trail with the gold. Two of the trio carried out a plot to kill the third member of the party so as to keep the gold for themselves, and at an old log cabin later known as Dead Man's Cabin, another murder occurred, the killer determining to keep all the gold for himself. He lost his nerve, however, and buried the treasure, planning to return later so as to avoid suspicion. But as years passed by his fears grew and on his deathbed he revealed the secret of the murders and of the hiding place of the gold to Kinder, his friend. Eventually Kinder started for the North to find the gold. Those who followed after him found several notes pinned to the walls of cabins in which he had spent his nights. Each note carried the inscription: "Will be back next summer. In search of the hidden gold."

ACCUSED OF MURDER WITH BOMB

PUEBLO, Colo. (AP)—A technical error on the part of the Indian bureau has saved the murder for burial in the tribal custom.

Shortly before the Court to adjourn moved that the motion to prove the motion was upheld Judge J. Foster said: "Thus the legal man saved the life of the man who was accused of murder."

The State had followed an ancient custom of the tribe, the arms of its warriors during childhood. On Feb. 17, 1923, the death of the medicine man of the tribe in a blanket arms of the dead lay in a tepee, a scene obtained by the next day.

The next day the body was still alive on the ground.

Dr. E. E. Jones, Montana County, found evidence of the cause of the death. Susan Cuthbert, May, testified that the child had been buried in a tepee.
