Why a Cold "Hangs On."

Stop and think a minute. The tickling in the throat, the tight feeling in the chest and that racking cough are only the results of the cold, not the cold itself. To apply a soothing medicine to the irritated membrane does not cure the cold. The lungs, throat and nose are nature's exits for the poison, but the cold is in the system.

Shiloh's Consumption Cure will Cure a Cold.

It will cure a cold when it has developed so far as to be Consumption. "Shiloh's" supplies the blood with the vitality necessary to kill the germs and drive the dread disease out of the system.

Why keep on treating the results of the disease. Take "Shiloh" and you will cure the diesase itself, and leave the system strong to resist future attacks. "Shiloh" is guaranteed to cure. If you are dissatisfied after using two thirds of the bottle take the remainder back to your druggist, and he will refund the whole of the purchase money.

James South of Vancouver, writes:

"S. J. Wells & Co., Toronto—I suffered for years from a cough and tried scores of remedies. Occassionally it would disappear for a few days, but would inevitably return—worse than before—I tried Shiloh's Consumption Cure and from the first day my cough was relieved and finally it left me. "I shall be very glad to read to his lordship," Tina answered, simply; but for many a day she had not felt so shaw a little kindly attention to the aged and feeble old man toward whom she feit so strangely drawn.

Lady Arlesbury, too, went away, much pleased that her daughter was to be relieved from an unpleasant duty. She had hitherto been compelled to humor her grandfather, on account of a little clause which she happened to know was in his will; but the young lady often rebelled, and made it quite unpleasant."

"I shave read a great deal, and I have seen many of the paintings of the old masters," she answered.

"I should judge so," the earl returned, with a keen gance into her downcast face. "Have you ever been in Italy, in Rome, Florence, Venice?"

"Yes, sir," and now the color came and went.

"And you have been in France, Switzerland and Germany. No one could talk of those places as you do without having visited them," his lordship remarked, as he noted her embariassment, and, like Monsieur La Fort, began to think she might not be just what she appeared to be.

Tina looked up now, and her eyes met his calmly, steadily.

"Yes, sir, I have been in all those places, and many others. I went in the capacity of companion to a lady."

The earl looked disappointed. A nice little romance had failen to the ground. "Have you ever been in England before? Have you ever been in England before? Have you ever been in England before. Have you ever been in England to fail the sen many of the paintings and the sen many of the paintings.

That afternoon the housekeeper strayed into the sitting room, where Tina sat alone, busily engaged upon the piece of applique, and, being of rather a garrulous turn, she gave her an abridged history of the whole family.

She now learned for the first time that her aged companion of the morning was the Earl of Carisford, and the father of Lady Arlesbury, who was a widow with wo children, a son and a daughter. The earl had buried his wife more than

The earl had buried his wife more than twenty years previous, and only a few weeks later his only son.

The double blow nearly killed him, and for two long years he was partially insane. His mind gradually regained its natural vigor, but his health had been so shattered that he had been feeble ever since, and after the death of her hussince, and after the death of her hus-band he had insisted that his daughter should return to him and assume the care of his household. The Earl of Carisford was a very rich man, possessing a splendid town residence, two large estates in the country, and a rent-roll that a king would not his property was not entailed, the housekeeper said, consequently he could do what he would with it; but it was rumored that Lady Arlesbury's son, who was away being educated to some German institute, was to be his heir, and that Gertrude was also booked for no mean fortune; therefore her ladyship humored him in every possible way. Tina was much interested in the housekeeper's story, although she would not allow herself to ask a single question or make a remark that would tend to draw her out; she was peculiarly sensitive about appearing curious regarding the

She told Lady Arlesbury when, upon completing the piece of lace that needed repairing, she had asked her to remain and make lace for her, that she should be very glad to do so, and thus for a time she became a fixture in the house. She would have been glad to remain in any capacity, to be allowed to contribute to the comfort and happiness of the old the comfort and happiness of the old

"My lord, what will you do next?" she asked, laughing, but she yielded her consent, glad to see him so animated and interested under any circumstances, and Tina spent a happy afternoon among such treasures as she knew how to ap-preciate, and concerning which it was a matter of no small surprise to her at-tendant to see how much she knew. Of course, in one afternoon, they could not do much but glance through that mammoth institution, only stopping now and then to note particularly something of more than ordinary interest, such as the wonderful Rosetta stone, the Poptland vase, the Elgin marbles, and last, but not least, those ancient and curious manuscripts contained in four rooms of the east wing of the great building.

Here they were examining the manuscript of that amiable sovereign of England, Edward VI., and who had especially appealed to Tina's sympathies by his goodness and his extraordinary accomplishments, which so well fitted him to reign wisely and well, for his unfortunate attachment tunate attachment to the young and lovely Mary, Queen of Scots, and for his early death, when a voice behind them made the young girl start and catch her breath, which the rich crimson rushed in a sudden wave over her neck, cheek and brow.

extending his hand, said:

"Well, well, my young friend, where have you kept yourself all summer?"

"I have been traveling with my mother and sister, and only returned a fortnight ago. I trust you have been well, my Lord," answered Lord Ernest Holborn, as he shook the earl's hand warmly.

BASEBALL. NOTHING DEFINITE.

Chicago, Jan. 2.-Nothing was done today regarding the permanent organiza-tion of the Western Baseball Association. Temporary organization was formed last week, with the understanding that a con-ference would be held here today to launch the new league. Application has been made by the Terrent Leaving the of the Minnesota cities. Application has been made by the Toronto club, of the Eastern League, it is said, for a franch'se in the new league, but this the magnates refuse to confirm. Toronto would not be a desirable addition without Buffalo to pair with it in the schedule and in breaking the jumps. The Western Association cannot plan on Buffalo, which is at present a member of the American League. It would be necessary for the association to await the action of the American League concerning the dropping of Buffalo or Indianapolis before deciding on the Toronto application."
