But I hoped that he would

"We don't call her such hard names," said Lord Reckworth, laughing again. 'And you very likely know that she hasn't really a drop of French blood in her veins, so that she isn't guilty of treachery to her own country.' "I know that her father was a Pole," who escaped from Siberia, and took the name of de Nevers, in France, be-

"If it doesn't go through I'm afraid that will be the end of things generally for poor Mademoiselle de Nevers and for her fiance. It is an extraorcomplication-romantic and sensational in the extreme. But that only concerns us indirectly. When you meet her, if she choose to take you into her confidence concerning certain private affairs which are so strangely mixed up with the gravest political issues, she is at perfect liberty to do so. I will only say now, however, that if you wish to do Mademoiselle de Nevers a service of incalculable value —a service for which she should be grateful all her life—you will do your best to put into her hands tonight at the Elysee Palace Hotel, a small packet which I now intrust to you. Should it by any misadventure be lost, probably Mademoiselle de Nevers would kill herself" (the Foreign Secretary said this in a calm tone as if it were the most ordinary thing in the world). "Altogether I don't need to impress it up-on you, Mr. Brent, that you will need to guard the packet as if it were your

"Then it sounds simpler than it is," said Lord Reckworth. 'In fact, nothing could well be more difficult. The contents of this envelope only reached me last night, when it was at once shown to the Prime Minister. This morning I received a cypher telegram from Mademoiselle de Nevers warning me that a certain Count Ipanoff, of the Russian embassy in Paris, whom she lately refused to marry, suspects that something is on foot. She does not know how much he guesses, or what action he may have taken, but the thing is sure-every boat and every train between London and Paris will be watched even more closely than usual. A known agent of our Government would certainly not get through. Now, I don't need to charge you that this business must be mentioned to no one-no one at all-and you will begin to understand why I was anxious to get hold of someone who would be the right man, yet would not necessarily be regarded with suspicion. ## HORTONS HAVE DROPPED OUT OF THE CITY LEAGUE Jun., A. A. Orpen's Jack Britt, H. C. President Johnson stood by his umosborne's Larenzi, Patterson Bros.' pires regardless of conditions, and the feated St. John's.

By Way of Comment,

The Hortons have left the City League and indignation steeps many hearts, selieving that the executive had used the first Twin City championship nockey match between Berlin and Water-loo. When time was called, Berlin had 8 and Waterloo 2 goals. and indignation steeps many hearts, Believing that the executive had used them unjustly they did not show up for their scheduled game with the Seventh Regiment last night. It is questioned by many if the Hortons were used right. A week ago Monday night a game between the Hortons and the Aberdeens was announced, and when the former came prepared to play, they found that the Aberdeens had not shown up. They argued that this was no fault of theirs with justice, and claimed the game. The executive threw their protest over and repeated the trick, after discussing a protest laid against the game played last Friday, when, after the Hortons had apparently forced the Aberdeens to the wall, the former refused to throw off a second man to even up. They argued that they had worked the Aberdeens, out, and that they had proved their superiority, although the score was a tie. The game was counted against them as a default. The Hortons have proved themselves to be one of the fastest aggregations in the city. Their amateur standing has been questioned, and they have never played almost the same team throughout the season. It is regrettable that so fine a team saw no other course than to drop out of the league, but in doing so they showed that they were not afraid

Considering that Mr. Seagram is held upon his word and a two-hundred-dollar bond to deliver the Carling cup whenever the trustees request, there is little doubt but that the trophy will arrive here safely in the course of a few days. In fact, Mr. Arthur Little, the will be handed over to the Seventh Regiment Athletic Association. One satisfying feature of the episode connected with the cup is that the Waterloo people have not shown a desire to take that which is not theirs rightfully.

WAS DEADLOCK AT WATERLOO. It appears that the Carling Cup "We'll have to smuggle you matches came very near to not being played at all. Manager Smith told The Advertiser this morning that had the ment there would have been no games. The point was raised by London and was to the effect that Young, although "Not in such a good cause," returned he had played with Waterloo at the first of the season, had spent the re-"Then I think I've hit upon the trick mainded of the season on the Woodmission by the O. H. A. Woodstock You have plenty of time to Seventh men took off their uniforms the offer of half of the gates to play to put Young off. Then everything went smoothly.

LET THERE BE PEACE. The letter following was printed in a Waterloo paper: "On Thursday afternoon a letter was received from one of the trustees of the cup, in which it was stated that the conditions of challenge were not correct, as made by the Seventh Regiment team. The teams which are allowed to challenge are as follows: The intermediate champions of the O. H.

A., the championship team of the W O. H. A., of the C. A. H. A., the previous holders or the London Hockey Club. According to the rule the Seventh Regiment team comes under none of Then, again, all challenges must be made in duplicate, one for-warded to the club challenged and one to the trustees of the cup, whose consent must be obtained. This was not done by the London team, and from the letter received the trustees do not recognize the games played as for the Carling Cup." This was written by Secretary Raymo.

Mr. C. W. Smith, in answer, says that the first point, that concerning the technicality of challenging is not based on fact, as both Trustees Mace and Little had agreed that the challenge was properly made. That the Seventh Regiment were not "the" London team is scoffed at. They proved themselves victors in the city and such a point as the using of a different name would raise the objection of none but selfish bunch of players. Surely the Waterloos are too good sports to make any bones about such trivial matters. Another noticeable feature is that no objections were raised after the first game, which Waterloo won.
