SOME STORIES OF WINDSOR CASTLE

Historic Pile Where Kings of England and Italy Meet.

TREE FROM NAPOLEON'S GRAVE

Has Existed as a Royal Domain Since Time of the Normans-The Ghost of Queen Bess.

London, Nov. 18.—The workmen now engaged upon improvements at Windsor Castle need to tread warily, for the scene of their labors is replete with historic associations. Nor are these confined to the castle buildings. Of no place may it be more truly said that while there are sermons in the stones, there are tongues in trees to speak a chapter from history. In the garden adjoining St. George's Chapel is a tree with one of the strangest of stories. Blighted and stunted by lightning, it stands to recall one of the tragedies of history. It is a willow and grew from a cutting taken from the parent tree, which grew above the grave of Napoleon at St. Helena. For long it flourished in its new position. But, on the day of the battle of Sedan, in which the power of Napoleon III. was crushed, a flash of lightning carried away its chief branch. Still, in its mutilated state it continued to grow lustily enough until, years later, it was smitten by another lightning stroke. Careful comparison showed that the second disaster synchronized exactly with the death of the Prince Imperial at the hands of the Zulus in Africa. Windsor Castle, in some form or another, has existed as a royal domain from Norman times. Hardly a reign has passed without additions or alterations. Edward III. built the famous round tower or keep for a fraternity of knights who should meet and carry on the traditions of King Arthur's Round Table Knights. From the battle-OPENING AT SOO ments of the keep twelve counties may be viewed, and even in these smoky ments of the keep twelve counties may days the King may see the dome and lantern of St. Paul's by taking his stand on the summit of the tower. Edward III. found the labor problem as acute in his day as do some less distinguished employers of modern imes, and his works proceeded slowly. cut to what he wanted. Writs were issued to the sheriffs, mayors and bailiffs of the counties authorizing counties authorizing them to impress laborers for the work, with imprisonment as the alternative. William of Wykement was the architect, and his duties could have been little else than a labor of love, for his wage was but a shilling a day. Plague carried off the bulk of the 360 men engaged on the work in 1360, so more writs were issued. Edward did not live to see his undertaking completed, but Richard II. continued it, and had Geoffrey Chaucer as his clerk of works, ment of an arbitration commission prospects for a very quiet winter have the oldest part of Windsor, the remains moderated.
