In the front end of the upper story hundreds of dollars' worth of clean laundry laid out on tables ready for sorting and returning, lies hopelessly singed and damaged by water. Immediately at the rear, and where thousands of the fire was flercest, dollars' worth of special laundry machinery, much of it recently installed and of the most modern type, is completely ruined.

A Roar of Steam.

During the fire, the big boiler in the engine-room, which supplies the steam for the washing, and also for the enrine, blew off continually, with a roar that could be heard for blocks, and caused many persons to keep The firemen kept a safe distance from the big brick smokestack, fearing that it might top-

Their loss is fully covered by insurance.

Interesting Incidents.

The fire was replete with interesting incidents. William Dyer was J. Lochead, sk. askep in the front end of the stable when he was awakened by a cry of fire, and without waiting to dress himself, sprang from bed and ran to the rear of the stable, and succeeded in taking a horse to the yard safely.

In an instant he was back in again and rushing to the sleepingroom, put on his trousers, and then went back to get another horse. So quickly did the building burn that the place was filled with smoke and flame. He struggled on, however, and managed to secure W. Langley's horse, which he says, did not break loose. He had nearly gained the door when the animal was overcome by the dense smoke and dropped.

Mr. Dyer's Close Call.

Mr. Dyer was also overcome and fell. He would in all probability have been smothered had not Sergt. Down rushed in and hauled him to a place of safety in the yard. He revived shortly.
Mr. C. N. Spencer's horse, which is a very spirited animal, broke its halter off short, and rushed madly into the stable-yard. The animal greatly hindered those who were trying to get other horses out by making frantic efforts to get back into the stable again. It was finally captured, and away to another stable. Those who were on the ground early say that the fire spread with incredible rapidity, and seemed to spread through the Thompson stable from the loft downwards in a flash. Cries of the Horses.
