A Scholarly Pugilist

The boyish appearance of Charles Watson Mitchell has already been remarked. The Sun reporter who hunted up him and Mr. Madden experienced the hment the appearance of the pugilist provakes, and to that was a ded another surprise, for in his choice of language, manner, and enunciation, uite as much as in his physical appearance, Mitchell is as far removed from the typical bruiser as it is possible to conceive. His blue eyes and brown hair, delicate pink and white complexion, and the scarcely perceptible down upon his upper lip and chin all give him an expression of gentleness and simplicity. The first thing observable in looking him over that betrayed the immense force, determination and endurance that lay behind the smalling face was his great neck, that carried the ine of his back straight up, with hardly a curv, to the centre of the back of the head. That neck looks as if it could take, with little hurt, a very great deal of harumering, even from Mr. John L. Sullivan or the ham-handed Maori. Mr. Mitchell's height is but a small fraction over 5 feet 8 in hes, his weight only about 150 pounds when in condition, and like all horoughly well-projection of forms, he looks smaller than her ally is. He hands and cet are neither small nor large, but rather inclining to the former or perhaps apper ring to do so because of their perfect proportion. If the neck be overlooked, Mr. Mitchell, when dressed, shows nothing to indicate his phenomena powers; nothing upon which typedicate a suspicion that it might not be safe and easy to upend and spank him as if he were an ordinary smooth-faced youth.

But when he strips he see ms another being. as it is possible to conceive. His blue eyes and caby to up-end and spank him as if he were an ordinary smooth-faced youth.

But when he strips he see ms another being. Then his astonishing muscular development is seen. Under a skin smooth as -atin muscles hard, almost as bone, yet supple as serpents, play and glide with a freedom that seems the result of the individual yolition of each. They are not the stiff, knotter clumped muscles that one sees piled upon the pictures of gladiators, for their development has been effected by a process of intelligent and long-confinu d cultivation of the most perfect physical health, and the maintenance of such just and responsive relations between all the parts that none have been unduly forced and none reglected. The law of mechapics that a machine is only as strong as its weakest part, would as applied to Mitchell, properly be made to read that he is all as strong as his strongest part.

be made to read that he is all as strong as his strongest lart.

"I am twenty one years old," said he, "and was born in Birmingham, where my father was for twenty years a medical futor in Queen's college, and my unche, Alexander Mitchell, is still-living in the enjoyment of a large practice as a physician.
