

PIANO FORTES.—The first piano-forte was made by Father Wood, an English monk, at Rome, about the year 1711, for Mr. Crisp, the author of "Virginia." The tone of this instrument was much superior to that produced by quills, with the additional power of producing all the shades of piano and forte by the fingers; on which account it received its name. Father Wood, Esq., purchased it from Mr. Crisp, for a hundred guineas, and it remained in this country for many years, until Plinius, the maker of the lyricord, made one in imitation of it. After the arrival of John C. Bach in this country, and the establishment of his concert in conjunction with Abel, all the harpsichord makers tried their mechanical powers at piano-fortes; but the first attempts were always on the large size, till Zuppe, a German, constructed them of a small size, of which the tone was very sweet. These grew so rapidly into favour that there was scarcely a house in the kingdom in which a keyed-instrument had ever had admission.
