will find that the "Waldorf" is exceptionally advantageous. Its position right in the heart of the Metropolis has proved itself an admirable one.

Although within a stones' throw of the Strand, London's busiest thoroughfare, the Hotel enjoys a marvellous quietude, while its accessibility to the busy thoroughfares, shopping centres, leading theatres and principal Termini has proved eminently convenient for the visitor to London with but limited time at disposal. The Hotel itself appeals to the present day exacting traveller by its thoroughly up-to-date equipment. Its bedrooms with bathrooms adjoining and the direct telephone service in every room are invariably appreciated.
