

dation in California and the Richardson Institute of the University of Lancaster in England. The Exchange would act as a co-ordinating service, build on existing information centres and encourage the release of information. Accidental war research would supplement, not supplant, other efforts to reduce and eliminate nuclear weapons.