"The highly ingenious, attractive, and suggestive series of shilling books which now makes its bow to the public under the Home University Library's ensign is the symbol, in some respects of a revival, in others of a new era, in bibliography. In either case it is a symptom both of health and of hope in the future. . . . Each volume represents a three-hours' traffic with the talking-power of a good brain, operating with the ease and interesting freedom of a specialist dealing with his own subject . . . A series which promises to perform a real social service."—The Times.

"With the growth of popular education of all grades, it was natural to believe that there are a very large number of men and women of all ages to whom such a series as this would be a price-less boon and comfort. . . . The immediate discovery of a large, highly intelligent public, with ideas and criticisms of its own, is an invaluable reward to the public spirit that has inspired this undertaking, and a sign of great encouragement to all who are interested in the liberal education of the State."—The Nation.

"We can think of no series now being issued which better deserves support."—The Observer.

"Certainly no publishing enterprise of our time is more remarkable or better deserving of success."—Manchester Guardian.

"These dainty, vivid little books lend a new attraction to the acquisition of useful knowledge. Bright, spirited, and infallibly direct in their appeal, they should prove a treasure-house of inexhaustible value to those who are unable to afford expensive encyclopædias and weighty scientific treatises. For here is the world's learning in little, and none too poor to give it house-room!"—Daily Telegraph.
