WORTHCLIFFE DEFENDS HIMSELF

New York, Dec. 2.—A London cable to the Tribune says:—The following statement was made especially for the Tribune by Lord Northcliffe, with reference to Tuesday's debate in the House of Commons.

I don't know that has been called the United States but the broad facts of the situation are that my newspapers incurred the hostility of various members of the government, because, in my view, they were not doing their duty in the present circumstances.

My newspapers always have taken a view that, while victory is certain, the war is a much greater task than it has been regarded to be by certain members of the British government, who have published from time to time, false predictions as to the success of the British arms.

So far as the Times is concerned, during its long life, always has been openly attacked by the governments, but it has ultimately reformed, and we have no doubt if it is necessary again our authorities to make war, we will win, I shall get plenty more.
