St. Catharines, Feb. 4.—The moving-picture machine is the greatest modern invention in the interests of education. It is a "sermon in action"—each battle scene is a masterpiece of dramatic art. To be a successful actor, a man must have a clean life. Every fight fought with the gloves is a "sermon in action" which has a moral lesson for the thousands looking on. "Live like real men be clean control the heat that is in you, master your appetites, both of flesh and spirit." There is another side to boxing, quite apart from the sporting side. It is a business of great and growing importance. When we see purses verging upon 100,000 pounds put up by promoters of championship bouts, we must realize that boxing is a business. And, as far as the financial element is concerned, it is the most important business connected with athletic sports.

Wants a Change in Boxing Rules. In his descriptive article on the Carpentier-Beckett prize fight, George Bernard Shaw remarked that, under the old rules, Beckett could have been brought to the mark after his knockout, and could have continued. He did not intimate that Beckett would have proved a match for the Frenchman, but he implied that after being down for ten seconds he was little the worse for it, and might have continued to fight, and he might have won.

A Drug Store That Sells Second-Hand Pianos. Some time ago the Woolworth Drug Store in Albany, Ore., took over a music room next door, closing the entrance to that room so that patrons of it have to pass through the drug store. Through this room the store is doing a great phonograph business.

Many of them are sold through the taking in of second-hand pianos. There is for the store a quick sale and good margin in second-hand pianos. Really there are two profits: one when the sale of the phonograph is made and one when the piano is sold. Many are bought for cash—and they move promptly.

Twice a month the store advertises in the classified columns under the heading "Pianos Wanted," and this gets in touch with those who wish to sell. Four instruments were handled in November.
