O the wild days of youth 1 the dear dead days? Dark fro all the lights and all the chorus dumb And cold and faintly through the gath ring haze Of sad twilight time thin echoes come, And wand'ring voices haunt the glimmering ways.

Sitting alone in these last empty years, Life, starved and dwindled, tells its old tales o'er And, like a wind, the Past sings in mine cars, And, like a wind, goes by. Alas ! no more For me the glad green Spring of smiles and tears

Oft from the dreamd and of the Long Ago, Pale faces seek me with their eager eyes, And fain I'd follow them, and fain would know, How fares it with them 'neath the starless sk That brood above the silent shades below.

Brave souls and beautiful, to what forlorn Mute fields of death's cold kingdom are ye pass O dreary Death, that hath nowiere forborne, To pluck earth s fairest flowers and o'creast Sweet scents and colours with relentless scorn

Ah me ! A little while the evening light Shall finger wanly in the western sky ; A little while before my fifthing sight. The paths day shall glimmer ere it die,

Then, dumbly dark, shall fall all ending night.

y them well Ilis eyes gleamed; the yellow stumps stood evealed once more, I guess so. Folks do not stop there. Is it far from here ? Not very; about half a mile.

Then let us make haste and reach it. I an enched to the skin. We plodded on, my companion more than keep-ng pace with me. Fresently we left the edge of e ravine, entered what seemed to be trackless woods and keeping straight on until the lights of some habitation gleamed fi thfully through the wet It was a ruinous old place with the windows all { lrawn to one side as if the foundation had settled.

and the pillars of an old porch nearly rotted away. A woman answered my fellow traveller's knock. My companion whispered a word or two to her, and she turned to me with smooth, voluble words nated by a faint glimmer of starlight. I knew not of welcome. She regretted the poverty of their accommodaions, but I was welcome to them such as they how close I stood at the brink of the dead'y ravine.

Where is Isaac ? demanded my guide. The has not come in yet.
