CRISIS FOR ENGLISH GIRLS. Neither Money Nor Careers Open For Many of Them.

Every year the question of marriage is becoming more and more difficult for men as well as for women, says Lady Aberconway in The New York Times. Men maturally hesitate to take peunilies girls from luxurious homes. Women demand from men a purer life, a more ideal pose. Thus, fearing to marry, men drift into baohelor life, where the affections are cold-stored; women find themselves in increased numbers stranded on narrow incomes, with no training, no occupation, and no means of bettering their lot. Even in the most favorable case where a girl is loved and won by a husband who is not only wealthy, but beloved, the penniless wife enters his house as a dependent and not as a parfner. How different is the case in France, where almost every woman has her dot; where the first thought of parents at the birth of a girl is to saye enough for her so as to make her independent of marriage if need be, and if she desires to marry, give her financial help in founding a new family, in the affairs of which she is an honored partner, and not a mere dependent.

If the daughter's dower deprives sons of an extra share of their paternal inheritance, each man who marries finds his wife possessed of a comfortable sum to help the household, and thus the property of the pair is not markedly less than we find on the average in England. But an immense difference lies in this; that instead of the family fortune being the exclusive property of the husband, the wife is a partner, and has, by the law of "Communité des Biens," an equal share in all the family possessions. This arrangement brings incalculable happiness to women in conferring dignity and independence.

Any father who cannot give his daughter a downy ought to see that she is taught a profession or business, preferably his own business or profession. Every shopkeeper ought to train his daughter in ommuercial knowledge; every architect, artist, decorated in the second of a dressmaking establishment, or, indeed, launch out into any paying business in which she had knowledge or talen

Women Angry at Short Term. Because a woman known as Queenie" Gerald, pleading guilty to iolating the "white slave" law, was sentenced to only three months, while suffragettes are thrown into prison for long terms for breaking windows and throwing acid into pillar letter boxes, intense indignation has been mani-said:

"The deputy chairman of the London sessions offered the suffragists and their friends the deepest insult possible by sentencing this notorious member of Mrs. Warren's profession to such a short term for trafficking in human fight and blood while Mrs. in human flesh and blood, while Mrs. Pankhurst and a few other noble women are being done to death for women are being done to death for merely trying to get in a position to force laws which would put an end to just such a vile trade as the Gerald woman plied in a Piccadilly flat."

The police raid on "Queenie" Gerald's establishment was highly sensational and had so much publicity that the contrast between her sentence and those of the suffragettes was quickly noticed.

Craze For Old Mantelpiece. A curious burglary occurred recent-ly in the West End of London, Eng. A woman well known for her enter-A woman well known for her enter-tainments is moving into a house in Brook street. The house is empty, but there were three very fine old mantel-pieces, which had lately been pur-chased and fitted in.

One day three men drove up to the house in a builder's cart. They said they were from the builders, with or-ders to alter the mantelpieces. They carried through the operation in a workmanlike manner, and drove off orkmanlike manner, and drove of with the mantelpieces in the cart. Since then nothing has been heard of the mantelpieces or the operators.

The other day, a man who is a mighty good judge of human nature was telling a few friends how he had just recently had a narrow escape from being done out of several hundred dollars. In the course of the conversation he said that one of the reasons why he judged that his man was not what he had represented himself to be and that he was very hard up was the fact that the fellow in question had worn the same suit from the first time he came to town. The ambassador walked directly from the room with bowed head, and every one waited in stient sympathy until he had gone.

The word passed swiftly through the great house, and through the open windows the servants were heard crying loudly for Boron con Marbot's carriage in the court below.

"The king is dead. Long live th king!" murmured Shirley.
"Long live the king!" repeated et and Mrs. Sanderson in unison. And then Armitage, as though mastering a phrase they were teaching him, raised his head and said, with an unction that surprised them: "Long live the emperor and king! God save

He turned to find Chauvenet close at his side. He had not heard the man enter, but Chauvenet had been in his thoughts, and he started slightly af finding him so near. Chauvenet held in his white gloved hand a gold cigarette case, which he opened with a de liberate care that displayed its embellished side. The smooth golden surface gleamed in the light, the helmet in blue and the white falcon flushed in Armitage's eyes. The meeting was Armitage's eyes. The meeting was
