A heavy rainfall in the Northwest on wissis course for nim to pursue was con-cospit the offer so kindly and cordially made. In fact, there was only one thing from the quession first being mooted which stood in the way. Lake Booth was only a factory operative, but he was a proud man -proud of his independence, and of the labor which purchased it, and at the first glance he could not bear the thought of indebiedness, not even to Mr. Greenhalgh, or to Mr. Crompton. Then it courred to him that he might look on the money advanced to him in the light of the loan, to be worked for and saved until he had accumulated sufficient to repay whichever of these kind friends might provide the means for his scoape. It was therefore without hesitation that he told Mr. Greenhalgh that he glafly and gratefully accepted the offer which had been made to him, and that he was ready to follow out the instructions of his friends to the letter, and without delay. He made no allusion to his intention of paying the money; that was a determina-tion scored up in his heart of hearts, and which, if he lived, he would carry out. Richard Buckley was a listenet to this conversation, and when the proposal for Booth's emigration had been made and accepted, the kreper was taken into the conference as a coadjutor in further aiding Booth to make his encage.
