The Seven Hearts of Conde.—In the Church of Chantilly, under the base of a pillar which a child might cover with its hands, is the resting place of the hearts of the seven princes of the line of Conde—seven hearts whose renown once filled the wide world. The black band of Chantilly, in 1793, willing to rival the patriots of Paris, who descerated the repose of the dead in the vaults of St. Denis, tore "the seven hearts of Conde" from their place of repose, where they were each enclosed in a silver wase. The silver wase the republicans (red or black) took into their own keeping, very patriotically; but they throw the seven hearts over the wall of a gr.len which was contiguous to the Church of Chantilly. A gentleman, the Sieur Petit, found them, surnounded by hiles and flowering shrubs, in a book under the shelter of the garden wall, where they had remained forgotten for years. So excellent them any control of the parts miles of France as a species of miracle. The Sieur Petit quely took the hearts of Conde it careful keeping until the restoration in 1815, when he brought them back to the then Prince of Conde, who had them re-enclosed in silver, and buried

Dond and John Huntzh.—The great interest excited in favor of a commutate of Dt. Dodd's sentence led to the belief, at the time, that his life had not been really sacrificed. Many plausible stories respecting the Boctor having been subsequently seen alive, were current; but the most positive evidence to the contrary exists. The strempt to resuscitate him was actually made, by a no less distinguished Surgeon than John Hunter. He seemed then to attribute the fastere to his having received the body too tate. Wonder ful effects were at that time expected from galvanism; and it would have been wonderful indeed if any restoration had taken place after more than two hour's inspended animation. John Hunter was not wont to be very communicative upon the subject, even to his most intimate friends.

The deteo in sacrifice is said to have been a D. 271, and Claudius died at Sirmium in 269, shortly after defeating the Goths in a prehed battle, in which their host amounted to 220,000 mes. He was more probably one of the victims of the ainth persecution under Au clian. The era of Valentine's death w.s. also that of Z-nobia's defeat at Edessa, and the d at action by the same cap for of her wonderful captal of Palmyra. Whe there is the practice therefore of young people on this day choosing their parts that i rends, or Valentines, is in hour of the marryred bishop, or in imitation of the birds, is a question so profound, and about which so much is to be said on both sid s, that we begleave to decline deciding at. There is a graceful legend of the saint's marryrdom in which the birds and the bishop are so closely combined that the honor of the isstival seems rather their joint property, than a matter of dispute between them. Whist Valentine was in the agonies of marryrdom Lao doves have detected in put in a still a some for a moment, hissed his lips with heir rose tipped bills, and side by side sorred up with a steady and equal fight until they were lust among the clouds. The City Elections.

We fear that, for some reason or other, the Pilot, and the party with which it the members of the Association had held twenty is supposed to act, are anxious that these public meetings during the year; that 250 persons Elections shall be contested on political grounds. We judge so from the following passage in the number of that journal for Saturday :--

"There has been some difference of opinion among the Irish Electors of these Wards, some of whom were disposed to support candidates who had been identified with Tory principles. A split among the Reformers would have been an amortinate occurrence. We are glad to learn that the differences have ceased to exist. See the letter to the Transcript, in our advertising columns."

On turning to the letter alluded to in the last line, we were somewhat surprized to find that all the names desired to be struck off the requisition to Messrs DeWitt and Rodden, are those of French densite tensent, from rice flour boiled in water.

Sa Sacrata Son T valares Yout obodient servant, AUTHORITAS.

I am of opinion that this is a case which, on every principle of moral obligation, requires restitution.

It is true that a suit against the Huffs had been pending since 1843, and this was the very ground alleged in the Courier for the interference of Hawkins, while it appeared in evidence that a petition to the College in 1844, by the Huffs, and which might have altered the case materially, was, for some reason unknown, kept, back by Hawkins, and never reached the College Council.

These is no evidence that the dealings of Hawkins with the Huffs were authorized by the College Council, or even known to them; and his own letter animitted to us, and of date January 2, 1850, contains the expressive intimation that his hand-writing must not, on any account, he seen by the College. The plan, too, submitted in that letter, for preventing the College from asking more than five or six dollars for the land, indicates to my mind a deep laid plot.

With regard to the visit of Hawkins to the Island, Mr. Roof has told us that that was undertaken at his instance, and not at the movement of the College Council. It appears to me, therefore, very desirable that the grounds and reason of his interference should be distinctly stated, so as to remove every impression of compinery in the case.

I don't see on what principle the same sum was demanded for 250 acres of bush land as was to be given in propertion for all the rest of the Island, with clearings to the extent of 480 acres, and buildings judicially estimated at the value of £1,300.

As to the two floorand dollars to be paid by Mr. Roof, I can learn authing of any such sum being apolem of till September, 1850, and the evidence of Mr. T. Bell, who conducted the transaction on the part of the Huffs, went; in my opinion, to set aside the averment of its being the attention, to set aside the averment of its being the attention, to set aside the averment of the land with the improvements? If the land was in 1845 estimated at its collars per acre uncleared, I am presty certain it afterpt of office-getting was the nomination of Barker as one of the Assessor for the city. O JACOB DEWITT, AND FRIDAY, February 14. At Cleveland, floor marks, per barrel, 25 cents more than at Toronto, but that difference in pice is not sufficient to warrant shipments from the latter Port to the former.

Throughout the city we hear complaints of the dullness of business, and we fear the weether, which is quite mild, with rain, will not tend to promote it.

We may mention, that the number of hares of Pot and Pearl Ashes received at the Inspector Store, for the week ending to-lay, greatly exceeds the receipts of any single week, for several weeks previous.
