Reminiscences

Dedicated to the Waterdown C. G. I. T. by the Author

There was a club in Waterdown, And it was wondrous gay-ll sorts of plans were thought of Where to spend a holiday. All

And "Orillia" was decided, —Not a one had been before, So to new thrills all looked forward, And adventures by the score.

So one "5 a. m." they started —Nothing later could be tried! Chaperoneless! all excited! Undeterred by wind or tide.

They were laden down with baggage, They had baskets, one and all. For their future meals depended On what larders they might call.

Well, they reached their destination, On Tecumseth street, it was, Chaperones were there to greet them, And lay down a few laws.

Two, each day, should do the cooking Without murnur or complain, Household goods should not be harmed Lest fun be on the wane.

Where'er you went you'd see them, In pairs or in a bunch, Hiking off for somewhere, Or to the park for lunch.

When each would seize a basket, Spoons, or dishes, or the pie, And thus were meals transported Without a single sigh.

They went bathing (?) in the bathtub If the lake was e'er forbidden; They held "sings" upon the stair steps With a fiendish joy unhidden.

And-Oh my, they met the Plunketts, Basked in Albert's winning smile, And thereafter lived on memories Love lorn maidens beat a mile.

And they saw a real live author, One of true Orillia fame, Whose stories they had read before, Marian Keith by name.

Old Home Week brought diversions, Fireworks, concerts, games and while of dancing on the pavement

They never got too much

They went to Church demurely, To the movies—each and all. In motor boats, and rowing boats, Nor in the lake did fall.

They "swum" the lake—they fished the fish. They saw all that they could, And always ready were to eat, And my! Those "eats" were good.

One morn they rose at 4 a. m. To speed a parting guest, They loved him well—he'd helped the cooks.

And they must do their best.

To raise a racket in the town And wake the tired folks, And practice up on "Georgia" How one wished for bad egg yolks.

But one sad lack was ever felt Thro' all the golden hours; Young men were scarce as old hen's

Or January flowers,

Three brave Horatios-all they saw. But what did three avail? The one could swim and one cance, The "leftovers" would wail.

The chaperones lived through it all, A miracle, you'd say, Tho' one the rest cure had to take, When they were well away.

And yet in dreams she lived it o'er, And heard that sweet (") refrain, "Georgia my happy home, (May I ne'er hear thee again).

The neighbors too have had sleep, The towns fallen in its wont Of dignity and quietness; -Enjoy it? No we don't. Orillia, August 26, 1922
