Bill for the Repression of Crime in Ireland.
(Special to THE HERALD.)
LONDON, May 11.
In the Commons, to-night, Sir Vernon Harcourt, Home Secretary, introduced a bill for the suppression of crime in Ireland. The bill provides that in places where the ordinary law is not observed, special tribunals, consisting of three judges, may be appointed by the Lord Lieutenant to try cases without a jury. The judgment of the Court must be unanimous. Appeal can be made to the Supreme Court, the judgment of the latter to be given by a majority of judges. The Supreme Court may dismiss but cannot increase the severity of sentences. Parliament will be asked to provide a special remuneration for special judges. The bill also gives power in search for secret apparatus of murder, such as arms, threatening letters, etc., power to enter houses by day or night, under warrant of the Lord Lieutenant; power to arrest persons proving about at night and make them give account of themselves, who are to be dealt with summarily; power to arrest strangers, as crimes are generally committed by foreign emissaries, the hospitality of England not being for such persons as agents of O'Donovan Rossa, and power to remove foreigners considered dangerous to the place. The Government therefore intend to revive the alien act; secret societies are to be dealt with summarily and membership thereof will constitute an offence under this act. Cases of aggravated assault are to be treated in a summary manner. Power is given to repress intimidation and unlawful meetings, the latter to be dealt with summarily. Newspapers containing seditious and inflammatory matter are to be suppressed and their proprietors required to enter into recognizances not to repeat the offence. Justices can compel attendance of witnesses about to abscond. The Lord Lieutenant can appoint additional police where necessary, at the cost of the districts concerned. Compensation for murder and outrage will be required of the districts where they occur; the outrage will be dealt with summarily by courts consisting of two stipendiary magistrates.

The Standard says the peace which has been patched up between the Government and Irish members of parliament is entirely broken by the introduction of the Repression Bill. The Irish members complain bitterly of the abandonment of the new policy of conciliation and intend to offer strenuous opposition to the passing of the bill. The Times says it regards the Repression Bill as a proof that the Government have measured the nature and extent of the hostile forces with which they are confronted in Ireland. The Telegraph's Dublin correspondent says he is authorized to state that the story about Justice Morris being threatened with assassination has no foundation.

It is believed the cab conveyed four men who went to point out the victims by a signal, and to see that the murder was carried out, and that these men subsequently re-entered the cab and drove back to the city.

Michael Davitt.
(Special to THE HERALD.)
LONDON, May 11.
Michael Davitt has written to the Standard on the assassinations. After expressing admiration at the temper of the Standard's language, since the terrible murders, he says: "I would feel that I have neglected my duty if I permitted your remarks to pass unheeded. For the opinion you express of the sincerity of my condemnation of the murders, and for your belief that Parnell, Dillon and myself are guiltless of alliance with the assassins, I am thankful." In answer to the Standard's request to come forward and make a clean breast of the information that would throw light on the murder, Davitt recalls the fact that he came out of Portland prison at 3 o'clock on Saturday p. m., after having been confined in solitude for 15 months without seeing a newspaper or article that did not pass through the hand of the governor of the prison. He rebuts the implication that he and other leaders must possess information to track the assassins. He declared that Parnell and Dillon cannot lend any more assistance in bringing the assassins to justice than that given in their manifesto. Davitt refers Foster to the speech that he (Davitt) made before his arrest, in which he predicted the accumulation of crime that would result from the policy Foster was pursuing and held him responsible before God.
