The exhibition will be an educator, an object lesson, magniand far reaching in its consequences. It is by visiting such an exhibition as this that our farmers and mechanics are enabled to compare the different methods pursued in these various avocations and estimating the value of the respective results obtained. Such an exhibition also affords our merchants a rare opportunity of bringing the merits of their respective lines of trade to the notice of a very large constituency all at once. In these and a thousand other way the exhibition is a great factor in educating, entertaining and amusing the people, and no doubt the forthcoming Prince Edward Island exhibition will be very largely attended. Not only in consequence of its educative and attractive features is the interest in exhibitions stimulated. The valuable prizes offered are well worth striving for and this reward of merit is always a cause of generous rivalry and keen competition among exhibitors.
