lowing interesting story:—One evening last week Joe Mayweed and a bachelor last week Joe Mayweed and a bachelor friend of his, were invited out for the evening to play croquet, and to trip the "light fantastic." Early in the afternoon they started for the place of amusement, and as the party would not be complete without something to enliven them, the music box was placed in the arms of Joe. Joe's friend is very fond playing croquet, but as Joe himsolf could not play the game very well he insisted upon them starting the dancing. They at last consented, and went ing. They at last consented, and went into the house, where everything was soon put in position for dancing. Then Joe with a smile on his face, went to fetch the box. He opened it, and looked in, and, oh! the fiddle had remained at home. Joe was very and at this intellihome. Joe was very sad at this intelligence, but a young gallant from Benmiller, who had a fast horse, relieved him a little by promising to drive after the fiddle, which he did, and they had their
