LINCOLN'S BIRTHDAY.

By GEORGE FITCH.

Author of "At Good Old Slawham."

This is the birthday of Abraham Lincoln. He has had no use for it almost fifty years now, but he has done what few men are able to do. He has bequeathed his birthday to the nation.

Lincoln's birthday is a holiday in the states that have agreed to forget the civil war and focus their attention on the somewhat inspiring figure. On this day men stop cheating each other and walking over the heads of those who can't get out of the way and rather sit by and let the politicians, unscrupulous and otherwise, do their worst. It is generally agreed on Lincoln's birthday, by the speaker engaged in commemorating it, that if Lincoln were still alive he would adhere firmly to the political party to which the speaker belongs. Lincoln is one of the few American statesmen who have been so great that they have been borrowed by every known political party after their death, when they could not object.

On this day also the public schools cease from their pursuit of the curriculum and educate the children about Lincoln. Nothing does the growing brain of a child more good than to plant a few ideas about Lincoln in it. If a boy learns enough about Lincoln at the age of ten he may possibly pause at the golden age of twenty, while worrying over the fact that his college allowance is only $200 a month, and reflect on the fact that Lincoln extracted more wisdom from a pine knot and a borrowed book than most people have squeezed out of a public library.

It also does the politician a lot of good to stop once a year and reflect upon Lincoln. Lincoln was a politician and got himself elected president of the United States. But he didn't do it by trading off his immortal soul for delegates. He acquired a principle early in his career and stuck to it. Though at times the air was too full of blarney to be breathed with pleasure, Lincoln became a great leader because he insisted on remaining in front when the shooting was good. But he didn't enjoy his job. He left the pleasure of his work to posterity. A great many statesmen are called upon to choose between their pleasure and posterity's and to go to posterity, not being on the ground at the time, has usually lost out.

The Human Machine.

By RUTH CAMERON.

Strange? I could hardly agree with my nephew. True, Mary, the invalid, is still alive, and Jim, her great, husky brother is dead. He did not die suddenly, by accident, but after a lingering attack of pneumonia.

I have known Mary for years, and I had known Jim almost as long. As a child, Mary was sickly. Jim came into this life with all the bounties nature can bestow, when she chooses to be generous. He never really had a day's sickness up to his last. Yet he is dead. Mary, beginning life almost still-born, was so sickly that her mother had little hope of saving her. She had been sick for weeks at a time, since. Yet she lives.

Strange? Not at all. Mary never had more than a little store of the precious fluid, life. She has been taught, ever since childhood, to husband it, to use it but sparingly. Jim, brimming over with that same fluid, used it prodigally. He did not drink, it is true, but he overate, underslept and overworked. He did not have any bad habits, except the worst of all, he never took any care of himself.

Mary treated herself as if she were a very delicate piece of mechanism—a watch, you might say. Jim treated himself as if he were a steam roller. Mary noticed every little grinding noise in the machinery and sprang to its repair. Jim never noticed any.

It always strikes us as strange that the sickly outline the healthy, so-called. Yet is it? The human machine is a very complicated, very wonderful bit of machinery, which we who are healthy take no bother to study. We know better than to treat our automobiles, our sewing machines or our baby carriages that way.

Jim had his automobile overhauled regularly. It was always in the best of condition. He never had himself overhauled. He had had been eating the wrong things for a year, and too much of them. He had persistently neglected his lungs, his heart, his liver and his kidneys. He got his exercise running his automobile. The first real test to which his own personal machine was put discovered flaws in it here, there and everywhere. Now he is dead—Mary lives.

Someday has said: "Health is a crown on the head of the healthy; no one sees it but the sick." It is equally true that only the sick really value health.

The greatest tribute that can be awarded to any mechanical invention of man is that it is almost "human." The human machine is the standard by which we measure all others, and by which all others fall short. Why not try to give it at least that intelligent understanding that you would give a new automobile or a watch?

Household Notes

The left-overs of the toilet soap, if saved, will make an excellent shampoo solution. Melt them until a soft soap consistency, then add some water and rub on the head; it will be found much easier to clean the scalp.

When logs of wood have been placed on an open fire and are partly burned, when the family is about to retire, stand the logs on end and put water over them. They will not endanger the house nor burn to waste.

All white leathers, excepting kid are best cleaned with soap and water. Use a stiff nail brush and plenty of soap and water. After the shoe is scrubbed, rinse off the soap and put the shoes on a stretcher and dry in the sun.

A mustard plaster is a good old remedy, serving as well as an emetic, it should not be kept in the same place all the time. It acts just as well if placed just a short distance from the spot affected as it does if directly over it.

Tan shoes should not be polished if they become soiled, moisten a soft cloth and rub it across a piece of pure white soap. With this wash off the dirt, allowing the soap to remain in the leather, and polish with the palm of the hand.

If the skin beneath the fingernails is very rough, before retreating dip the tips of your fingers into cold cream, allow the skin to take up as much of the cream as possible, then dip the fingers into talcum powder and wear loosely fitting gloves.

Fishing.

which all men are wishing, when we can drill our valve and hit, to spend the long day fishing! Spring comes again and soon the face of earth will smile and chuckle, and dimes will say to husbands gay, "To work get down and buckle!" We greet with roars the grist of chores, with pawing and with plucking! We take a pole to some deep hole and spend the long day fishing! Spring is the time when people climb from age clear back to childhood, when each heart burns and throbs and yearns for open air and wildwood. Spring is the joy without alloy, the best the gods are dishing, when we can speak down to the creek and spend the long day fishing!
