An open room opened before him; that is, there was no one in it, though from the preparations visible on the table before him and from the somewhat savory smell that arose from the various pots and pans steaming on the stove, he gathered there was someone in the house in the large and comfortable sitting room of which he caught a glimpse through the half-open door

Resolved not to stop at anything, low that he had entered the house, he gave a sharp rap at the door, and with just an instant's delay, follow-ed it by a quick entrance that disturbed no one. For this room like the back one was entirely empty, and he found himself staring with sinking heart and a discouraged spirit at a collection of stiff photographs in pine cone frames on a mantel shelf that reached nearly to the low ceiling. No evidence here or anywhere in the room, that presence, to encounter which had come so far, and was now risking so much in the way of politeness and habitual self-respect.

"Oh, I'll drive you; but it's curus. That man! Why, I thought he never He was still standing there, hesitating whether to pursue his researches into the ghostly parlor, when he heard a sudden step, then the sound of a door hurriedly opened and shut, and then-could he believe his ears? the tramp of a man's foot on the path without, followed by the noise of wheels, as if the horse and buggy he had left in front was being tampered with. Struck with consternation, but not robbed entirely of his self-possession, he ignored all the properties, and, bounding forward into the hall, he reached the front door and flung it open. Dr. Molesworth, with hat in hand and his overcoat on his arm, was irmping into his buggy.
"For mercy's sake, Molesworth!" the doctor cried, holding out his arms, as if in that way he could stop that stern and determined man. But the other only waved his hand, and, thrusting on his hat, took the lines and speedily drove away. As he did so Dr. Cameron called out once more: "If you are a man, come back and face me, but if you are a The words were lost in the clatter of the horse's heels. Dr. Cameron stepped into the house and sunk helplessly on the first seat he found there. So Julius Molesworth was a coward as well as a knave, and was not above the meanest of tricks to save himself from an encounter that his conscience told him could bode no good. Dr. Cameron writhed with shame and impotent rage as he thought f it, and could have cursed his folly for the lack of precaution he had shown in leaving his horse within the reach of the pursued fugitive. But tho could have calculated upon such an expedient being employed by a man for whom he had once done on actual service? though to be sure he had unwittingly robbed him of his bride and been unwittingly robbed of her affections in return.

The direction taken by Dr. Molesworth in his flight had been away from This added to the perplexity of Dr. Cameron, who saw himself left at a strange house in the face of a coming storm, and with no means of return to his comfortable quarters or of nursuit of the man whose dastardly flight proved him to be even more of a factor than he had supposed in the great mystery which involved not only his own honor, but that of a beloved and stricken wife.

His thoughts were interrupted in a characteristic manner. "Well!" exclaimed a voice from the doerway, "and what does this mean?" He rose, turned and faced a strongly built, somewhat energetic middle-aged woman, whose air and attitude bespoke her to be the mistress of the house.

"Ah, madam, excuse me," said he, giving her such a bow as she had probably never before received. "You find me an unwelcome intruder into your home. I came to see that gentleman who has been boarding with you, and has played me the trick of running off with my horse and buggy, without giving me so much as an opportunity of telling him my business." "He is a smart un," was all the ans-wer he received, as the woman strode into the room, and stood peering out of one of the side windows that overlooked the approach from the town.

"You won't catch him," said she.

"Because it is going to storm. It is going to storm so that the man who has half an hour's start will never be come up with by the person who chooses to follow him." Dr. Cameron laughed.

"You speak as if it were January, and we were in the wilds of some wil-derness, instead of being not a hundred miles from New York, and in a time of the year when winds blow and snow scurries, but does not pack or

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

Dr. G. C. Osgood,

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
