"You might as well have it," whispers temptation, but your Canadian Patriotism says "No!"

THE tempting suggestions of selfishness meet no response in a patriot.

For he knows that selfishness self-indulgence are just now allies of the Hun—they are on Germany's side against us.

Then the devil-whisper says "might as well have it," every Canadian answers "No!" except for the bare necessities, we should not be spending cents a day.

Every expenditure we make on things not absolutely necessary directly affects the strength of Canada and allies.

Materials that go into the making of things you can do without are needed for our overseas.

Any of those materials that enter into our unnecessary luxuries are brought from foreign countries and occupy precious space in ships; space sorely needed for those cargoes which can be used for the winning of the war.

The labor that fashions the things we unnecessarily use is labor which could and would be employed to real advantage in the production of war necessities.

Knowing all this, how dare you divert a single unnecessary dollar from your country's war effort!

The shame that must inevitably follow your every self-indulgence, at so grave a time, will be your fitting punishment—if you persist in buying the things you merely want and do not need.

Restraint, indulgence, cultivate thrift—for thrift is an evidence of patriotism.

And the money you save by thrift will be yours to lend to your country whenever the call comes.

Comb Sage Tea in Faded or Gray Hair

If Mixed with Sulphur it Darkens so Naturally Nobody Can Tell

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy and attractive with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, all ready to use, at very little cost. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied—it's so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft and beautiful. This preparation is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

and I don't care who says nay. The burglars knew where to visit when they wanted to make a rich haul. I have been working night and day ever since to get my display up to a worthy mark. HERE IT IS NOW and you can find nothing superior anywhere. I make every fur piece in the store and can guarantee the quality of every pet, every stitch of work, every last touch of fashion.

The prices are inordinately low, for I am not located in the high rent and plus expense district.

SAVE MAKE CANADA SECURE

LORD LISLE'S DAUGHTER

By C. M. Braeme

"Yet you are old enough now," said Lord Lisle, "and you know many nice girls. How is it?"
"I have not met my fate," said Philip. "I know clever girls—beautiful girls; but I have not yet met the girl I should like to marry."
Lord Lisle felt something like a sharp pang of sorrow at these very honest words.
"You may be mistaken," he said. "No," interrupted Philip. "Like all other young men, uncle, I have my ideal wife. I do not care so much for beauty; but she must be fair, and sweet, and gracious, true and modest, refined and sensitive—a kind of violet."
"There are many such," said Lord Lisle.
"I believe it," was the laughing reply; "but I have not yet met that particular violet I am destined to win and wear."
"How can you know that?" asked the uncle.
"Because," he replied, "I am a great believer in first love. Some day I shall meet a young girl, and I shall say to myself the first time I see her, 'I must win her for my own.' I am no believer in love founded on intimate acquaintance and constant association."
Lord Lisle sighed deeply; but he said no more. There was no hope, then, for his darling child. Ah, if Philip could but know, could but understand the treasure he had won! A few days afterward, one of Philip's old college friends, Lord Carlow, came over to Naples. He was going on a racing expedition, and pressed Philip to join him. They should return, he said, in a month or six weeks. Philip looked anxiously at Lord Lisle when the invitation was given. It will be a sad interruption to all our gayeties," he said. Madame la Comtesse will be right hand. Still if Philip would like it, by all means let him go.
And Philip went. Rita lost no hope. He would return, she thought, tired of the sea, tired of being always with gentlemen, and then she might charm him more easily.
It seemed a strange coincidence that on the very day he left a letter came from Daisy, saying that, in accordance with Lord Lisle's wish, she would be with them on Tuesday.
Lord Lisle was unfeignedly pleased. She will find you much changed, Rita," he said. What will she think of you? Poor little Daisy! we must all be very kind to her; she is quite alone in the world."
When is she coming?" asked Rita, in a low voice.
He thought she was agitated at the thought of seeing her sister.
"On Tuesday," he replied; and, Rita darling, I shall leave the arrangements of her room with you. Remember, that even as her mother took you, a poor, friendless child, to her heart, and shared all she had with you, so we must make her one of ourselves. She is to be treated in every way as your sister. I shall have two daughters instead of one. You know her, see that every taste and wish is consulted. You will be very happy, my darling, now."

"Yes, very happy," she murmured; "and I will see to everything for Daisy."
Yet if for one moment she could have had her will she would have smitten the gentle girl dead. In her dream, in her all-absorbing love, she had forgotten her, forgotten the danger that might come with her, forgotten almost the evil deed and treachery that had given her Daisy's place. It came home to her like a mortal blow, yet she was powerless to avert it. In vain she chafed the long night through, trying to think of some plan or expedient which should keep Daisy away. But none of them did she dare to put into practice, lest they should excite suspicion. She remembered the puzzled look on Lord Lisle's face when she had dissented before. She dare not offer any more objections; suspicion and mistrust would surely follow them. "I must meet it boldly," she said to herself. "I have played for a grand stake; it is worth some risk, some bravery. If I meet the danger boldly, I shall conquer in the end."
She busied herself in superintending the preparations for Daisy. She placed flowers and books in her room. She told Lord Lisle how fond her sister was of music; how sweetly she sang. A magnificent piano was purchased for her. Had she been the daughter and heiress coming home, she could not have been more prepared.
Rita spoke of her continually. She told the countless her foster-sister was coming to live with her.
Madame's first question was "Is she pretty?"
When Rita answered that she was very fair and sweet, with golden hair, the color of Beatrice Cenci's madame answered "Ah, a blonde! Then I shall dislike her. The only blonde in the world I admire or like is myself."
Which very characteristic speech being repeated to Lord Lisle by Rita caused him great amusement.
It was late on Tuesday afternoon when Daisy reached the villa. Lord Lisle, with the delicate tact that distinguished him, thought it would be better for the two young girls to meet alone.
Rita nerved herself for the effort. Brave and courageous as she was, when the carriage drove up to the door her heart beat so that she could hardly see or hear. Some few minutes afterward Daisy entered the room, and Rita's eyes were drawn to her with a look that was half dread, half fear.
Daisy—a tall, elegant girl, with a sweet, pure face and tender eyes—Daisy, grown and altered, yet with the same smile, the same spiritual expression, the same clear, musical voice, and the face so fatally like the pictured face of Dame Sybilla Lisle.
