PORT HOPE, July 6 .- A terrific collision occurred just east of the Port Hope viaduct Cobourg, to which he pushed through the heavy fog. As he reached the heaviest part of the down grade, he saw the locomotive of the other train just turning the curve south of the toll-gate, and he whistled for brakes, but the grade and the loaded cars were too much to make any possible difference in the speed of his train. At the same moment the engineer from the east observed the train shead. possible difference in the speed of his train. At the same moment the engineer from the east observed the train ahead, but he had just got on the fullest head of steam so as to ascend the grade. As a collision was unavoidable the engineers a collision was unavoidable the engineers prepared to save themselves by jumping or running back over the cars; those who jumped escaped without injury. Fireman Clay ran to the third car and jumped, spraining his shoulder. Porter, a Belleville brakeman, was the most seriously hut, how seriously the doctor is yet unable to say, but fears a fatal result. The locomotives came together with a fearful crash, were thrown up in the air and then tumbled to the south side of the track. Not less were thrown up in the air and then tumbled to the south side of the track. Not less than eleven or twelve freight cars were destroyed. Half of them at least are smashed into splinters. The locomotives were destroyed completely. The track is torn up for about a dozen car lengths, ties being broken into splinters and rails twisted out of shape. The damage cannot be covered with less than $200,000, and will probably exceed that sum.
