The Britannia crossed the line at 10.30-17 and the Vigilant at 10.31.20. Both yachts bore off to the starboard, and lay well in shore prior to putting about. The Britannia headed better than the Vigilant and fully maintained her lead. Both boats bore up the channel with every stitch of sail. The Britannia was closer hauled than the Vigilant owing to her greater draught. The Vigilant, off Clock Lighthouse, spurted, but the off Clock Lighthouse, spurted, but the 10.30. The Vigilant then tried to weather the Britannia, but the latter bore up, with the result that her balloon canvass did not draw. Both boats crossed straight to the Skelmerlie shore, the Britannia again preventing the Vigilant from weathering her. In mid-channel Captain Haff got the Vigilant's bowsprit in, but did not get the weather berth. Both boats were headed up the channel. The Vigilant had her spinnaker the channel. The Vigilant had her spinnaker boom, but did not have her spinnaker canwass run out. Getting further into the wind both yachts set their balloons, but the Vigilant did not set her enormous reaching jib. At 12.30 both boats were scudding before the wind. The boats

Tips From Wall-Street.

Henry A. King & Co.'s special wire from Hubbard, Price & Co., New York:

The market has been in part artificially maintained. Of course everybody in and out of Wall-street recognizes that stock brokers are not carrying the large lines of speculative shares that they were 12 months ago. The capitalist and the small investor alike have blocked up securities, and they do not feel like selling at this moment because in the absence of legitimate buyers there is no limit to which the decline might go. Self-preservation, therefore, is the first law of nature, and those that had securities, recognizing how limited the market is to sell, can best protect themselves by holding on.

We expect to see much lower prices made for Sugar. For reasons that will be appreciated, Gas sold off scmewhat. The buying on the decline by strong capitalists was confident.

McIntyre & Wardell wired Dixon: The posits. The two last changes are primarily due to loans to corporations to meet their July payments, which items are of course carried to their credit and doubtless will be gradually drawn down during the next few days. The same changes are partly due to the entrance of Union and Liberty banks into the Clearing House, their figures being included in the statement for the first time. A large amount of money is, however, said to have been borrowed on Sugar and Spirits in anticipation of increase of duties on these articles. At the close to-day the market was steady.
