

But the world calls me from thee, and we part,
And to another's touch thy chords must swell ;
No more their tones shall vibrate through my heart,
No more my ear must listen to their spell ;—
Farewell, beloved lyre—for ever fare thee well.