nclusion

I have pointed only to the highlights of the discussions trade matters at the Ministerial Committee meeting, Mr. Chairman, I must hope to suggest in this speech the detailed answers to many questions lich may arise in the minds of some of those here today. I wanted rather emphasize the wide range of commercial questions which, along with other onomic and with political matters, are a normal part of Canada-Japan insultations.

One point which is particularly noteworthy is the obvious termination of our two countries to tackle trade problems in a spirit good will and to adapt and improve the patterns of our trade which are so portant to both of us. This determination is based on friendship between r two nations and a confidence in each other as trading partners.

I believe that this friendship and confidence provide evidence the distance we have travelled from some of the unhappy periods in ternational relations in the past. On mutual confidence and on continuing forts towards the effective solution of trading and development problems volving many countries, we can build the political trust which is the sential ingredient of world peace.

This is the path to which Japan and Canada are now committed.