Trying to Make Buckingham Palace Exterior More Presentable - Archduchess Ella

Thanks to the smoke and soot which fill the atmosphere of the British metropolis to the extent of thousands upon thousands of tons, according to recent chemical investigation, public buildings and private residences have to be submitted periodically to cleaning, scraping, and repainting on the outside.

The facade of Buckingham Palace alone has received no scraping or painting for more than sixty years, and that is why it presents an extraordinarily grimy and dingy appearance, now rendered all the more noticeable by reason of the whiteness of the great marble memorial of Queen Victoria at the entrance of Mall, and to which the palace furnishes an extremely sombre background.

The exterior of King George's metropolitan residence has remained so long so because his grandfather, the Prince Consort, had a theory that if the facade were treated with oil, well forced into the material, a surface would be produced capable of resisting the deleterious effects of the London atmosphere.

Upon the results of this investigation will depend whether or not some means can be devised for securing the stone and repainting it, or whether it will be necessary to reconstruct the entire frontage of Buckingham Palace. The general impression thus far is that the latter will be the only thing to do.

While parliament will be asked when it meets to vote the necessary amount of money for the work, no matter what its cost, will not involve any additional burden upon the taxpayer.

The palace occupies the site of a mansion built by the Duke of Buckingham at the beginning of the seventeenth century, and was purchased by George III, in 1763, and became the principal residence of his consort, Queen Charlotte, George IV, after his accession to the throne, enlarged and repaired the palace at the cost of several millions of dollars, but was so much disgusted with the result that he declined to live there.

A recent ceremony of renunciation at the Court of Vienna in which Archduchess Ella, the granddaughter of the emperor, played the leading role, is one which takes place on the eve of the marriage of every princess of the reigning house.

There is no question, indeed, of a mesalliance for the bridegroom, Count George Waldburg, is a scion of one of those medieval houses which formerly exercised petty sovereign sway in Germany, and which by virtue of the decisions of the congress of Vienna just a century ago, were authorized to retain, among other things, their former sovereign prerogatives, that of mating upon a footing of perfect equality with the now reigning families of Europe.

In any good library you can learn why you should drink cocoa.

Ask the librarian to show you the authoritative books on dietetics. Turn to the chapter on beverages. You will learn that of the three most extensively consumed table beverages—tea, coffee and cocoa—cocoa is distinctly beneficial, whereas tea and coffee are frequently injurious.

Of course there are folks of rugged constitutions who drink tea and coffee and apparently feel no ill effects.

But there are many more not so rugged. Good cocoa offers them a wholesome, nourishing food in liquid form.

In Lowney's they get cocoa at its very best. Handlers of cocoa beans tell you that we buy the most costly cocoa beans that the tropics afford.

Lowney's Cocoa The Best Way to Make Cocoa

One Kind of Cruel Husband By RUTH CAMERON

ONE of those very kind reader friends who do me the compliment of thinking I know about ten times as much as I really do, asks me to express my opinion and prescribe a cure for seven or eight kinds of erring husbands.

The last kind mentioned is "a husband who speaks sharply to his wife without occasion, and ridicules her opinions."

My dear friend, if you think I am a sane and sensible woman, you must already know my opinion of that kind of a man. And so to the matter of a cure for him—well if I knew such a precious secret I am afraid I should have to make my everlasting fortune by forming a corporation to sell it.

If a census could be taken of husbands who think they love their wives and yet never hesitate to humiliate and wound them by speaking sharply to them or making fun of them, I suspect that every town would yield its hundreds and every city its thousands and tens of thousands.

Now there are undoubtedly very few of these men who would not be horrified at the thought of being capable of inflicting physical pain on their wives.

And yet I know that the heart of every woman who has a husband like this will give me a speedy affirmative when I ask if the mental pain and humiliation which she suffers from being constantly rebuffed and ridiculed is not quite as keen as physical pain.

A woman cannot help wanting to have her opinion received with some respect and her foolish little mistakes overlooked, even if she is a wife. And mind you, when I speak of ridicule I don't mean the tender ridicule that is half kindly jest and half pride. I mean the unsympathetic ridicule that brings a lump to the throat and makes the heart sore.

Now I know that some of the men I am accusing would defend themselves by saying "But if you could only hear the utterly foolish things my wife says."

That will be some justification, prisoner at the bar, on one condition. Would these same things arouse your derision if some pretty young stranger said them? Or would you listen as deferentially as if the pretty young thing were dropping pearls and diamonds of wisdom from her lovely lips?

Now, prisoner at the bar, that won't let you off. Your wife said just as foolish things before you married her and you didn't find it necessary to be rude and disagreeable to her then.

Daily Hints For the Cook

POTATO SALAD. Six cold boiled potatoes, 1 medium-sized onion. Slice potatoes, chop onion fine and place in salad bowl.

POTATOES IN THE SHELL. Bake 8 medium-sized potatoes. When done take from oven and cut into lengthwise pieces. Remove the inside carefully without breaking the skins, wash, add butter and pepper and salt.

Connaught Likely Another Year. London, Oct. 10.—It is almost certain that the Duke of Connaught's term as governor-general of Canada will be extended over another year, says Truth, which is generally reliable in such matters.

The Duchess of Connaught and the Princess Patricia are coming in April for a few weeks to England and will visit the Crown Prince and Princess of Sweden at Stockholm. It is considered probable the latter will visit Canada next autumn.
