A WOMAN'S BACK.

Not One Woman In Twenty Has a Stong Back

The kidneys are to blame nine times out of ten.

A. H. Hutton, Jr. McCreezy, writes: "Two years ago last fall I had a very severe pain in the all of my back. When I would rise it used as if my back would break. My kidneys were badly out of order, and I would have to get up three or four times during the night to urinate. I had a doctor, but he could not find a cure."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50 cents per box or $1.25 for all 6 boxes or mailed direct on receipt of money by the I. Millburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

If ordering direct, get "Doan's."

When the blood isn't properly filtered the poisons that ought to be carried off by the kidneys are sent back through the system, and it's hard to be wondred that backaches and lame backs come to make life miserable.

Doan's Kidney Pills are a specific for all kidney troubles. They begin by expelling all the poisonous matter from the kidneys, and then heal the delicate membranes and make their action regular and natural.

The Evening Chit'Chat

By RUTH CAMERON

IMAGINE a big power of electricity stored up somewhere. Imagine a lot of pulleys and motors arranged by that electricity.

And then imagine a transmitter that will not work at all sometimes, and sometimes only feebly, so that most of the time the electricity is useless and the pulleys and motors are idle, or else moved by other stores of electricity.

That's a description of some people.

The electricity is their store of personality.

The motor and pulleys are other minds ready to be moved by the electricity.

And the transmitter that doesn't work right is a confused and unattractive manner and way of speaking.

Everyone must know such people who suffer daily from the handicap of a bad transmitter.

Just recently my attention has been drawn to a particularly unfortunate case.

She is a young girl of education and refinement. She has a very good mind. The electricity of personality, you see, is far from lacking. But the transmitter is very, very bad.

In the first place her manner of speech is so hurried and nervous and confused that people often do not understand her. Naturally that prejudice is against her. People who talk with her sometimes have to guess at half she says, and consequently make mistakes which make them appear and feel awkward. And no one likes to appear awkward. One is prejudiced against the person who makes one appear awkward.

Furthermore, the confusion which this girl causes apparently results to confuse her, and she repeats herself and breaks the thread of her story by hanging a great weight of irrelevant detail upon it. She is a victim of that unfortunate habit of which I have spoken before of stopping in the middle of a would-be-interesting account to decide "was it Tuesday or Wednesday." It must have been Tuesday, because I went to Rath's on Wednesday. No, that was Thursday. I guess it was Wednesday, after all, or some similarly unimportant and uninteresting detail.

And there are so many like her.

If the parents of this girl would only take her habit of rapid speech in hand, and do all they can to correct it, even employing an elocution teacher to give her proper exercises, if someone who knows her well could point out their faults to her, and help her to make a living, it divides their efficiency and their chance of success by at least two and probably four.

How much unappiness and inefficiency, how many tears and how many bruised hearts might be avoided if only families and close friends, instead of letting things drift, would point out their faults to people thus handicapped and help them to overcome them.

La MARQUISE de FONTENOY

Divorces at the Court Ball in Buckingham Palace—Sir Tatton and Lady Sykes in Court and Out

(Copyright, 1911, by the Brentwood Company.)

Queen Mary has somewhat modified her drastic edict against men and women who have figured in divorce cases, and carried copies which separated from one another, as for instance, the Duke and Duchess of Marlborough. For at the court ball given at Buckingham Palace during the visit of the German Emperor and Empress, there were two divorced men present, with the queen's approval. One of them was her own cousin, or rather the first cousin of the king, Prince Kaiser, and of the German Empress, namely, Princess Louise of Schleswig-Holstein.

Princess Louise, who is a daughter of the late King Edward's sister, Helena, Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, married Prince Albert of Prussia, brother of the reigning Duke of Anhalt, which is one of the petty states of Germany. She lived with him in Berlin, where she became a very popular figure in society, and in particular a great favorite at court, especially of her cousin, the emperor and empress.

Forced by Prince Albert's disgraceful conduct to leave him, and probably knowing that her mother and grandmother would endeavor to induce her to again marry her husband, in order to avoid a public scandal she went to New York under the name of Countess Munsterberg.

These rules against divorced women, though enforced by Queen Victoria, and so greatly relaxed by King Edward that at one court ball alone more than a score of divorces present were first announced by Queen Charlotte, consort of George III., and maintained by Queen Adelaide, consort of William IV., who despite all the influence brought to bear upon her, absolutely barred from court the celebrated Lady Holland.

Sir Tatton and Lady Sykes

Sledmore is one of the most famous sporting houses in Yorkshire, and is known throughout the racing world on both sides of the Atlantic as the home of Sir Tatton and of Lady Sykes. The news of the total divorce of the latter by the other day will therefore excite no little interest, and also of the family portraits by Romney and Reynolds were rescued by being cut out of their frames. But the source of the story which ran the whole length of the huge mansion, and the contents of which were given in full to the press, are as follows: The house was of the Georgian style, and was built at about the time of the American declaration of independence, for Sir Christopher Sykes, the second baronet of his line.

The Sykeses are of Cumberland origin, but have been settled at Sledmore since 1765, when Richard Sykes, a Hull merchant, married the daughter and co-heiress of Mark Kirkby of Sledmore, a descendant of the ancient and powerful family of Kirkby of Kirkby Trelough, Cumberland. It was his son, a paragon, who received a baronetcy from the crown in 1785 by reason of the great political influence which he commanded, in connection with his extensive estates. He was the great-grandfather of the present and fifth baronet.

Sir Tatton is a man of eighty-five, who is very eccentric, and has all his life long had two hobbies, namely, horses and the building of churches. While he spends large sums of his enormous fortune on these two fads, he will often stint himself, not merely in the luxuries, but in the comforts, and even in the necessities, of life. Notwithstanding his maintenance of one of the greatest racing stables in England for over fifty years and his winning of the Derby and other classic events, he has never been able to secure election to the Jockey Club.

This is largely owing to the fact that he has been at law with quite a large number of influential persons of the turf in connection with horses, one of his most sensational suits of this kind being against Lord Marcus Bredford, for many years the starter of the Jockey Club and now the chief of King George's racing stables. During the closing year of King Edward's life chief of that sovereign's racing stable, do as he was enormously rich.

Sir Tatton had commissioned Lord Marcus to buy the famous race horse La Fleche at the sale of the estates of the late Baron de la Fleche. Sir Tatton considered that Lord Marcus had paid too much for the horse and repudiated the transaction.

Sir Marcus, who was so poor that he had the greatest difficulty in making both ends meet, thus found himself with an $80,000 horse on his hands, and proceeded to sue Sir Tatton. In court the baronet insisted that he had restricted the price to $60,000.

Lady Sykes testified that her husband had given Lord Marcus carte blanche, her evidence serving to decide the case against Sir Tatton. The latter got even with his wife by "issuing a public announcement that he was not responsible for any of her financial transactions and obligations, on or off the turf, and set down her pin money, whatsoever she applied to professional moneylenders, became involved in their toils, and then there was more litigation, the lawyers endeavoring to extract from her husband the money that she could not get from her. Ultimately Sir Tatton settled with them, which he was well able to do as he was enormously rich.

Courts Know Him Well

Sir Tatton's entire life has been spent in litigation and ever since his marriage in 1874, to Amelia, the eldest daughter of the late George Cavendish Bentinck, his wife has usually been on the wrong side of the law, as far as he is concerned. This litigation, almost all of a financial character, did not prevent their living together in a perfectly amicable fashion under the same roof. After fighting each other all day in the courts on every variety of subject, each in the morning, they were more mentally irresponsible they would return home together, preside at the same dinner table, entertain large parties of friends, breakfast together the next morning, and then proceed to the law courts, by different conveyances it is true, are usually affected her popularity, her social prestige, and her unflinching good humor, especially in the witness box where she was invariably referred to her elderly husband as "that old dear" whose "peculiarities" she alone was able to understand. Now they are peacefully separated, but better friends than ever. Their only son is Col. Mark Sykes, the author and explorer.

TIRED IN BODY AND IN MIND

Worn Out by the Monotonous Indoor Life of Winter—Spring Finds the Blood Weak and the System Run Down—Vigor is Restored by

DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD

Just at the time when the birds are bursting and the birds are chirping merrily in the treetops, many people feel most heavily the debilitating and enervating effects of indoor winter life.

The blood is so thin and watery that it fails to supply nutrition to the nervous system and to the vital organs. You feel tired, weak and discouraged, appetite fails, digestion is impaired, energy and ambition are lacking, and strange depressing feelings come over you.

But nature has provided certain restoratives to be used this time of year to form new, rich and dense new nerve force. This is found in condensed animal matter in Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Thousands of men and women have learned to escape the spring depression and weakness and discouragement by using this great restorative.

Vitality is increased, strength and confidence return, buoyancy is felt in every movement of the body, pallor and weakness and disease give place to the glow of health and vigor of mind and body.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, the great spring tonic and restorative, 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, at all dealers or Edmondson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.
