FRATS OF REPORTERS.

OME EXTRAORDINARY SO. WHICH THRY SECURED.

The facts are set forth bluntly; with the legitimatry, or otherwise, of such business the writer has nothing to do.

A few years ago the central figure in a otorious soundal suddenly decamped. When he went away he locked up his office and took the keys with him, and it was merally surmised that inside this office re books and papers which would there generally surmised that inside this office were books and papers which would throw considerable light upon the affair. For some reason, which did not appear to be understood the police did not force the door, but put a seal upon it less it should be tampered with by anybody else.

The public anxiety as to the contents increased, and at last a reporter determined to take the matter into his own hands. He procured the services of a locksmith, went to the office, declared hixself to be a detective officer, broke the seal, and with a skeleton key opened the door. He spent two or three hours inside the room, and to his delight discovered a number of documents which had everything to do with the case, and which he knew would make excellent 'copy.' He made hurried notes of their contents and then took his departure. their contents and then took his departure It was deemed wisest not to publish the results of the expedition immediately, but to wait a day or two. What the feelings of of the police were when eventually they were published may be imagined; but for reasons best known to themselves no action was taken against the paper.

In another case, somewhat similar, but more daring the reporter did not get off so well. It was in connection with a cele-brated murder, which completely baffled h e detectives. It came to the knowledge of a reporter on an evening paper, how-ever, that on a certain day one of them had prepared a report upon it, and, moreover, was walking about with it in his pocket. He made up his mind that he would get hold of that report.

First of all he, with some difficulty, discovered the detective, and having done so followed him up and down, waiting for a favorable opportunity to carry out his plans At length it came when the officer was in a quarter of very low character, which was crowded at the time. The reporter being particular what he did, told him that in the detective's coat-pocket there was a blue paper which be wanted, and promised him a sovereign it he would bring it to him at a certain place in half an hour. He brought it! The reporter rushed off back to his effice, and his paper made a great score by printing a copy of the report which was then sent back to the police station.

But the matter did not end there. The

the police remained outside, and the case night the proprietor entered the office and He gave the reporter £50, and told him to get out of the country as fast as he could. Some women's clothes were procured, and in this disguise he managed to get out, made his way to Liverpool, and sailed for New York, where he stayed several years. The police took no further action in the matter, and at last, when the whole thing was forgotten, the man came back.

Once, on the occasion of a great disaster in the North, it was realized that a certain nan was the only one who could give any information upon a certain important point in connection with it. There were two or in connection with it. There were two or three evening papers in the town, and at midday a reporter on one of them sought him out and obtained the desired facts.

This, however, did not completely satisfy him, for he wished to prevent his rivals rom getting at the man. Two or three dodges which he attempted with that object failed, and at length he had recourse to a desperate measure. He procured a draginyited his man to have some refreshment, and when his back was turned, put the leeping stuff into his glass. An immediate excuse for leaving him followed: The "Correct,' said her spouse, as she inned, breathlessly:

"Add two ounces of white pepper.'
"Pepper! Great goodness!' said shappy man, as he turned over the large carrots chopped into despondful of mustard, four chopped on

'Stop! Stop! You must be wrong, I'm sure. Why my dear I thought so. You are muddling up almond souffle with Irish stew. You've forgotten to cut the leaves of this blessed opokery book.

A London journal tells of a certain lady who has in her room a piece of statusty which bears the inscription, 'Kismet.' The housemaid was dusting the room one day, when the mistress appeared, 'Sure, ma'ama, said the girl, 'would you mind tellin' me m'aning of this writin' on the bettom of this figger?' 'Klsmet' means 'fate, ' answered the lady. 'Sure, an' is that it?' said the girl. A few days afterward the housemaid came Imping into her mistress' room. 'Wby, what's the matter with yon, Bridget P' asked the lady. 'Oh, ma'am, sure an' I have the most turrible corns on me Kismet P said the girl.

But the matter did not end there. The police had a pretty good idea which man on the paper was responsible, and determined to make it warm for him. They forbore entering the office, but relays of policemen kept watch at the entrance night and day, intending to arrest him as soon as he made his appearance.

The man inside got wind of this intention, and very naturally stayed inside. He slept there on a sofa the first night, assain the next, and again a third. Still story. The policeman supplemented it with something that he knew; but wirned the desperate. On the fourth proprietor entered the office and thing else would have to be done, the reporter £50, and told him to it the country as fast as he could.

Chicago has many wonders, and one of them is the Wheat Pit in the Board of Trade Building. On entering the great grey structure the senses are assailed by the feverish clicking of a hundred telegraphic instruments, the frantic rush blue-uniform-instruments, the frantic rush blue-uniformed messenger boys, the ceaseless jostling and shouting of busy brokers, the continual glitter of electric lights. All this is the normal condition of things.

There is a big officer at the entrance to the Pit, resplendent in a uniform of blue with shiny buttons. This man bears a fair reputation for versatity, and is always ready to initate strangers into the mysteres of the Pit. H tells this amusing story about one visitor.

Scon after dinner, the guests having returned to the drawing-room, the hostess begged him to sing. 'Most willingly,' responded the tenor. She attempted to open the pixto, and was surprised to find it locked. Search was made in all directions for the key, but in vain. So the evening passed of without music. When the great tenor went away he let the key fall on the floor of the ante room, where it was discovered the next morning, greatly to the amazement of the hostess, who was quite unable to solve the mystery of its appearance there.

Rough on the General.

Rough on the General.

A French actor, named Hyacinthe, once illustrated the saying, 'Discretion the bester part of valor' It was in the month of June, and a company of the National Guard of which Hyacinthe was a sergeant, was engaging a body of insurgents behind a barricade at the other end of a short etrest. One of the insurgeants, in particular, from a corner of the barricade was making remarkably effective practice on the assailants. At that moment up came a general.
