this alarming state of the seal fishery, which looks so ominous for the future. Some are of opinion that the seals were disturbed last year at the period of conception, by the steamers hunting and killing them on their second trips; and hence the season for producing their young is delayed by a fortnight or three weeks this year. The slaughter of old seals weeks this year. The slaughter of old seals last year was prodigious, and the number of steamers engaged in following up the hunt at late period was very great; but still it is friends, for the liberties taken with their friends, for the liberties taken with their later and l ice, and kept so till a late period—causing a corresponding lateness in the season for bringing forth their young this year. This, I think, will be found to be the real explanation; and if so, there need be no alarm as to the future, as such a casual occurrence may not present itself again for many years. As the mother seals abandoning their young, the the mother seals abandoning their young, the probability is that the instances in which such ted, and that of these a sufficient explanation may be found in the movements of the ice. DOLEFUL FOREBODINGS.

This exceptional state of affairs has created a panic here as to the future prospects of our seal fishery. Many are predicting the utter ruin of the fishery in consequence of the emor for anticipating the extermination of the seals. The employment of steamers has not as yet caused a much heavier draft or the seals than in former years when only sailing vessels were employed, and has not caused, and has not caused and has not caused a much heavier draft or the seals than in former years when only sailing vessels were employed, and has not caused and has not caused a much heavier draft or the seals than in former years when only sailing the extermination of the seals than in former years when only sailing the extermination of the seals than in former years when only sailing the extermination of the seals than in former years when only sailing the extermination of the seals than in former years when only sailing the extermination of the seals than in former years when only sailing the extermination of the seals than in former years when only sailing the extermination of the seals than in former years when only sailing the extermination of the seals than in former years when only sailing the extermination of the seals than in former years when only sailing the extermination of the seals than in former years when only sailing the extermination of the seals than in former years when only sailing the extermination of the seals than in former years when only sailing the extermination of the seals than in former years when only sailing the extermination of the seals than in former years when only sailing the extermination of the seals than in former years when only sailing the extermination of the seals that the extermination of the seals ably increased the catch. But, at the same time, there is ground for some anxiety and for vessels were employed, and has not considertime, there is ground for some anxiety and for the greatest vigilance in watching the effects of the employment of so many steamers on the seal fishery. That it is a more wasteful and destructive mode of prosecuting the fishand destructive mode of prosecuting the fishery than the old method cannot be questioned.
