To-day's the day that Jeffries promises to call Jack Johnson in the shape of a forfeit. While this is only mid-season for baseball, the great game is less talked about than any other sport. It has nearly lost all its old popularity, and will not return this season. Despite the fact that autumn is a long way off, fans are beginning to talk football. The game will have an early start this season, and in a short time teams will be formed. Toronto Stepped Up One Position in Standing by Winning From Baltimore.

Prefere's arm was gone. But, as is not unusual in cases of the kind, somebody blundered. If not tunusual in cases of the kind, somehody blundered. If not convinced before yesterday's game in Toronto that a good large mistake had been made, Mr. Dunn was left no room for doubt at its conclusion. It was a sweet revenge for Pfeffer. Not only a beating, but a seven to nothing one at that, was what he presented his former team-mates with; and his performance was indisputably stamped with the hall-mark of class. Dessau, on the other hand, failed to twirl to reputation and was hit hard and often. In addition, he developed a marked inability to hold himself togstare in the tail-end stages. It was club-swinging day for the Leafs, who collected no less than fourteen hits to the visitors' four, Kelley and Mahling incidentally helping their averages along with three bingles apiece, including two-baggers. Strang was high sticker for the Birds, with two one-sack walleps. The fielding of both teams was scarcely up to the mark, the work of the Oriole infield being especially poor. Some nice plays were pulled off, Kelley, Frick, Mahling and Catiz putting up the feature stunts, Joe's catch of Poland's centre-field drive in the seventh being particularly all to the merry. Pieffer pitched himself into several nasty looking holes, but invariably pitched himself out of them. What got him into trouble chiefly was a tendency to miss connections with the plate, and it resulted in free transportation to five of the Birds. Dessau was still more generous, his charities numbering an even seven. Birds. Dessau was still more generous his charities numbering an even seven on, sporting men will not be satisfied unless there is further evidence of good faith on the part of the boilermaker and his manager. If Jeffries is sincere in his desire to settle the question of sunacy with the negro he will sign arpremacy with the negro he will sign at ticles for a forty-five round bout or a finish fight for the largest purse offered and a $10,000 side bet. He can draw up the articles himself, naming the date for the mill and the opening of bids from premoters, also the time for putting up the entire amount of the purse and side wagers in the hands of a responsible stakeholder to be mutually agreed upon. Such a proposition could hardly be turned down by Johnson, although the latter might have reason to quibble over the amount of the side bet and the division of the purse. According to men of experience in such matters, Jeffries by taking this stand would put the match squarely up to Johnson and the promoters who might be willing to bid for the nith. see him in the pink of condition. But if Jeffries demands an unheard of guarantee regardless of Johnson's share of the spoils, sporting men declare that it will be conclusive evidence that the Californian does not want to fight again.

"It Jeff means business," said a manager of fighters yesterday, "he will be fair in the conditions he names. He has been expressing a willingness to fight Johnson some time now and he cannot let the megro escape. A match can be easily made if the parties to it are on the level, but if they are not it is just as easy to put u phurdles. A forfeit means nothing. Let Jeffries sign reasonable articles of agreement and the sporting world will applaud him. Coffreth will surely bid $50,000 for the mill, which is more money than was ever hing up for a mill in the history of the ring. If Jeff demands $100,000, win, lose or draw, you can bet that he isn't anxious to try conclusions with the black champion!"

Jugges of pugnism who do not benefice that Johnson can withstand Ketchel's trirific body punches. They insist that Ketchel does not have to pay attention to Johnson's head and that the stomach, heart, ribs and kidneys are the best objects for his attack. Joe Walcott, 5 feet 1½ inches tall, beat men taller and heavier by means of body punches. He had the punch, and among his victims was the clever heavyweight, Joe Choynski. If Ketchel is right when he tackles, Johnson he may prove that Fitz's argument is wrong. But Ketchel will not have a chance to beat Johnson or even Papke unless he begins to mend his ways.

"I am on my way to New York, where will post forfeit of $5,000 defending will post forfeit of so, or y title to the heavyweight champion-hip of the world. I have finished my heatrical season and, as I promised months ago, that I will defend my title Johnson is not and will not be the cham-pion until he whips me, and he will-never do that."
