A BEAUTIFUL INSCRIPTION.—In Trinity church-yard there is an inscription on a tomb so singularly and affectingly beautiful, we cannot forbear to record it, and the emotions it awakened in the bosom of a stranger. It is an oblong pile of masonry surmounted by a slab-stone, on which are cut the following words:

"MY MOTHER.

THE TRUMPET SHALL SOUND, AND THE DEAD SHALL RISE."

There are no other letters or characters to be found on the slab or pile. If there is one inscription in the thousand languages, that are, or have been on earth, fitted to retain its sublime meaning through every period of time up to the resurrection morning, it is this. The writer seemed aware that names would be forgotten, and titles fade from the memory of the world. He, therefore, engraved the name by which he first knew her who gave him birth, on the stone—and the dearest of all names, that of MOTHER, shall sound a thrill through the heart of every one who may ever lean over this monumental pile. If any shall wish to know further of her, who had a child to engrave her most endearing name upon a rock, he is sublimely referred to the sounding of the trumpet, and the rising of the dead, when he may know all.

LOVE AMONG THE TURKS.—A young man desperately in love with a girl at Stancho, eagerly sought to marry her, but his proposals were rejected. In consequence of his disappointment, he bought some poison and destroyed himself. The Turkish police instantly arrested the father of the young woman, as the cause, by implication, of the young man's death, under the fifth species of homicide; he became, therefore, amenable for this act of suicide. When the case came before the magistrate, it was urged literally, by the accusers, that if he, the accused, had not a daughter, the deceased would not have fallen in love, consequently he would not have been disappointed, and had not died. Upon all these counts, he was mulcted to pay the price of the young man's life; which was fixed at eighty piastres, and was accordingly exacted.

TOBACCO.

WHAT think you a lad of sixteen said to us lately, when we remonstrated with him upon the base indulgence of tobacco?

"I don't smoke because I love it, but because it's a habit I can't overcome."

It was at the same time a very sad and very laughable excuse. Can't overcome it—a boy can't overcome the filthy habit of smoking cigars, and chewing filthy tobacco; had rather deny himself the pleasure of decent company; rather possess a breath filled with the odor of corruption, than give up the pleasure of sucking at one of the most nauseous compounds that man, in his foolishness, ever concocted.

We pity that boy—we pity anybody who has not sufficient resolution to cast off a habit that he acknowledges is hourly committing ravages upon his health; who suffers in numerous ways; who loses self-respect, allows his teeth to accumulate offensive matter; lounges in ungraceful postures, obliges every one to open the windows wherever he goes, his own olfactory organs being deadened by the constant effluvia, so that he is not aware how great a nuisance he is; gives up all refinement—for who ever saw refinement—in the midst of a puffing, lolling, spitting circle? Who ever saw refinement in the low bar-room, the street-corner loungers, the mean, vile denizens of the most infamous haunts?

But what shall we do, when infants use the destructive agent—infants of six and seven years, some of whom smoke manfully, if that word pleases the grown-up sucklings?

Not long ago, a little boy, not seven years old, came into the house where we were staying, stupid and sick, reeling unsteadily, and fell almost senseless, upon the floor, causing great panic, as may be supposed. We found out the cause in a few moments. Another little boy, somewhat older, had coaxed him to smoke a few puffs on an old cigar, and the alarming symptoms of poison were the result of his first effort. Thus even babes are teaching one another, and it behoves parents to be on the watch, to guard these poor innocents from a habit that too often leads to infamy—that infamy—cherishes as one of her most darling sins.

LORD LUCAN AND THE "SPECTATOR."

Lord Lucan has published a letter, respecting an article which appeared in last Saturday's Spectator, and was copied by the Times. The noble lord threatens the Spectator with an action for libel. An evening contemporary takes up the cudgels for Lord Lucan, and condemns the article in the Spectator. Having had occasion to watch narrowly the conduct of that journal for five and twenty years, and ever found it alike fair and cautious, we are disposed to wait till we hear what it has to say for itself on the present occasion. There is a want of proper self-respect in the readiness evinced by some journals to take part, on all occasions, against those of their own profession, on ex parte statements from men high in office.—Daily News

SAGACITY OF THE NORTHERN BEARS.—

On one occasion a bear was seen to swim cautiously to a rough piece of ice, on which two female walrusse were lying asleep with their cubs. The wily animal crept up to some hammocks behind the party, and with the help of his fore feet loosened a large block of ice; this with the help of his nose and paws, he rolled and carried till immediately over the heads of the sleepers, when he let it fall on one of the old animals, which was immediately killed. The other walrus, with its cubs, rolled into the water, but the younger one of the stricken females remained in its dam; upon these helpless creatures, the bear leaped down, and thus completed the destruction of the two animals which it would not have ventured to do openly. * * * The stratagems practised in taking large seals are not much less to be admired. These creatures remarkably timid, and for that reason, always lie to bask or sleep on the very edge of the pieces of floating ice, so that on the slightest alarm they can by one roll tumble themselves into their favorite element. They are exceedingly restless, constantly moving their heads from side to side, and sleeping by very short naps. As with all wild creatures, they turn their attention to the direction of the wind, as if expecting danger from that quarter.—The bear seeing his intended prey, gets quickly into the water, and swims until he is leeward of him, from whence, by frequent short dives, he silently makes his approaches, and so arranges his distance that at his last dive, he comes up to the spot where the seal is lying. If the poor animal attempts to escape by rolling into the water, he falls into the bear's clutches; if on the contrary he lies still, his destroyer makes a powerful spring, kills him on the ice, and devours him at his leisure.

THE RIGHT OF FOOT PASSENGERS.—

In the course of a trial before Mr. Justice Coleridge, where a widow sued for damages, her husband having been run over and killed by an omnibus, the learned judge said he wished to make an observation. There was one thing it was really right to state. When passing along the street, the side pavements were for foot passengers, and the centre of the street was for carriages, and those who wished to cross were bound to watch their opportunity—to use due care and caution; but at the end or corner of a street if a foot passenger wished to cross, it should be known that the centre of the street belonged as much to the foot passenger as to the carriage, and he had as much right to tell the driver of a carriage to wait for him as for the driver to make him wait.—English Paper.

Lord John Russel delivered a lecture at Exeter Hall, London, on the evening of Tuesday, November 13, on the subject of "The obstacles which have retarded moral and intellectual progress."

He is a foolish husbandman who neglects to sow his seed—and he is an unwise man who neglects to inform the public of his business and whereabouts.

A SHREWD WOMAN.—Mrs. Rogers was very indignant on hearing that the Russians had taken flight—at the same time she observed that it must have been an outlandish sort of a place at best, for she couldn't find it anywhere in the map.

A WIT of the 17th century observed that, when the cannon of King Charles began to go off, the authority of canons was overthrown. It was first mitre and then nitre that governed the world.—St. Peter and Saltpetre.

"I find, Dick, that you are in the habit of taking my best jokes, and passing them off as your own. Do you call that gentlemanly conduct?" "To be sure I do, Tom. A true gentleman will always take a joke from a friend."

CONSIDERING the great utility of the ocean, are not poets wrong to call it a "waste of water?"
