April 28th—Messrs. Kennedy & Smith, who were in Mr. Walton's outfit, went over with one wagon and one team, and they managed to get back and then returned with the skill to make a landing after doing considerable cutting they returned with their load but on leaving the ferry they were very much surprised to find their wagon unloaded, part on the ice and part on the ferry. Considerable effort was made to get the wagon and a few odd things lost. The most difficult part was in extricating the wagon from the ice. The breaking ice was very unsafe for the oxen. However, they got off very well. Mr. Vermilion, is busy getting his raft in order. He is also building a good strong scow which he will use when he reaches home for crossing the river from one farm to the other. Bulletin News Service. (Written for Peace River Crossing) The ferry was launched here on April 24th and some 30 teams were over the river in 21st and 22nd, landing on the ice about ten rods from the shore with the ice floes causing more or less trouble, but no damage. All were very much pleased to be on their way home, as the trip has been a very trying and expensive one. Mr. Stone, of Beaver Lodge, was among the losers, having lost a valuable team carrying and expensive one to dispose of his valuable Percheron stallion. Mr. Smith, of Revillon's was the purchaser. April 28th—Messrs. Kennedy & Smith, who were in Mr. Walton's outfit, went over with one wagon and one team, and they managed to get back and then returned with the skill to make a landing after doing considerable cutting they returned with their load but on leaving the ferry they were very much surprised to find their wagon unloaded, part on the ice and part on the ferry. Considerable effort was made to get the wagon and a few odd things lost. The most difficult part was in extricating the wagon from the ice. The breaking ice was very unsafe for the oxen. However, they got off very well. Mr. Vermilion, is busy getting his raft in order. He is also building a good strong scow which he will use when he reaches home for crossing the river from one farm to the other. This has been a great spring for the farmers, as they are now acquainted with one another. Grande Prairie people are all hoping for a better season, as they are confident of having a good thing in their new country homes—Grande Prairie, April 24th.
