Side Talks by Ruth Cameron

AND YET MEN WANT TO VOTE.

RUTH CAMERON

In the state of New York, a woman was elected to the legislature at the last elections. When she chose her seat, opportunity of choice is given to according to seniority she found only the front and back seats left. Wishing to be able to hear, as she was there on business, she took one of the front seats.

Later, one of the men remarked upon her choice of a seat: "It's all right now," he said, "but toward the end of the session the men begin to get a little tired and uneasy, and sometimes they throw things around. When I read that my mind immediately commented: 'And yet men want to vote.'"

That's What They Always Say About The Follies of Women.

Ever since I have been knee high to a grasshopper I have heard every feminine frivolity and folly commented on in that way. Women go about with low shoes and silk stockings in the winter, and wear furs in the summer, and yet they want to vote. Women say illogical, silly things—and yet they want to vote. Women get themselves all out bargain hunting and save a dollar or two at the end of several hours' time (very rarely they had the time and didn't save the dollar or two) and yet they want to vote!

Now why should not men's wish to vote be held up to ridicule in the light of their follies? They really are them, you know. They have worn for many years a style of hat which is unspeakably ugly in itself which is coming to about one man in 500, and which is said to make the hair pop out. They are absolute slaves to fashion—and yet they want to vote.

Are Five Times As Susceptible As Women.

Men are five times as susceptible to flattery as women and yet the sex which has this great weakness of character wants to vote.

I don't expect any believer in equal suffrage ever expects to hear the last of the fact that when the first Congress-woman was faced with the terrible alternative of voting for one of the two most dreadful things of the world—namely, war or the other most dreadful thing: a dishonorable peace she broke down and wept. I haven't a doubt that on the annals of Congress we could find records of occasions when men have wept, and surely they could have nothing any more worthy of lamentation.

Just Because They Weep Instead of Swear.

Besides weeping is women's substitute for swearing, and I don't suppose profanity is exactly unknown in Congress.

I am not ashamed of Jeanette Rankin for weeping. I don't believe that the fact that women have a different way of expressing their emotion proves that they should be disenfranchised.

If two women were elected to a get into a dispute and "throw things around," wouldn't the country ring with the fact? It would be given headlines in all the papers and all the anti-suffragists would say, "And yet women want to vote."

And yet for years men have been doing the same thing as a matter of course. One almost wonders why someone hasn't suggested an anti-suffrage for Men League.

Mainly About People.

Henry E. Huntington of New York has one of the finest collections of Shakespeare in the world. He paid $75,000 for a 2 x 3 inch volume of Shakespeare's "Venus and Adonis," which was printed in 1599 and weighs only two ounces.

Miss Hazel Riley, who is a deputy sheriff of Oakland, Cal., is the only woman law officer in the United States, if not in the world, who uses an airplane in the discharge of her official duties. She calls it her patrol wagon. She keeps a sharp lookout for violators of the automobile speed laws.

Senor Vicente Blasco Ibanez, the Spanish author, after visiting many American cities, gives the preference to New York. He is going to Mexico to secure material for his next novel. He speaks of New York as the paradise of women because of the influence they exercise and the freedom they enjoy in the great metropolis.

William Butler Yeats, the Irish poet and playwright, who insists that "Ireland has politics on the brain" and will never quit "until Home Rule is obtained," is now in America. He looks the part of the poet and dreamer; is more than six feet tall and has a great shock of iron gray hair. He speaks English with an Irish accent. He is an Irish Nationalist, but declares the Sinn Feiners are the strongest politically.

Madame Patti was very fond of birds, whether stuffed or alive, and she had a collection of stuffed songsters from all over the world at Craig-y-Nos. They were artistically exhibited in glass cases, and had a large room to themselves; but the live birds were perhaps more interesting. There were seventeen of these, all parrots, many of them of most beautifully hued plumage. This fondness for parrots was one of the few traits in Madame Patti that were characteristically Italian.

The Prince of Wales seems likely to become quite an Empire tourist. He will probably leave for Australia and New Zealand in March. But this is not all. It is rumored that afterwards he will visit India like his illustrious father and grandfather before him. Those who are really intimate with the Prince realize how annoyed he is by the rather silly title "Prince of Wales" that was bestowed upon him by some of the papers in the United States. It is too fanciful entirely for King George's eldest son, who has a healthy contempt for flattery. In this respect he resembles King Edward, who hated the name of "Eddie" given to him in certain quarters long before the man-in-the-street affectionately dubbed His Majesty "Teddie."

Illustrating British ingenuity during the war, Sir William Sutherland, M.P., tells a good story of an Englishman's adventure in Budapest when Bela Kun and the Bolsheviks were in possession of the town. The Englishman, he said, was anxious to leave, but could not get a passport or other facilities. At last he went and sat in a train trusting to luck to escape. Bolsheviks approached the carriage and spoke to him, but he made signs that he did not understand. They brought some higher officials and he was interrogated again. This time he heatedly remarked: "Oh, buzz off! Buzz off!" These words seemed to make a great impression, said Sir William. Obseques were made, a notice put on the window, the carriage door was locked with the Englishman alone inside, and the train moved off. On the outside of the carriage was a notice bearing these words: "This compartment is reserved for Count Buzz Off."

HOME AND THE OFFICE.

Home is the place where the laughter should ring, And man should be found at his best.

Let the cares of the day be as great as they may, The night has been fashioned for rest. So stand at the door when the toiling is o'er And leave all your burdens behind, And just be a dad to your girl or your lad— A dad of the rollicking kind.

The office is made for the tasks you must face, It is built for the work you must do; You may sit there and sigh as your cares pile up high, And no one may criticise you; You may worry and fret as you think of your debt, You may grumble when things go astray, But when it comes night, and you shut your desk tight, Don't carry the burdens away.

Keep-daytime for toll and the night-time for play, Work as hard as you choose in the town, But when the day ends, and the darkness descends, Just forget that you're wearing a crown— Go home with a smile! Oh, you'll find it worth while, Go home light of heart and of mind; Go home and be glad that you're loved as a dad, A dad of the fun-loving kind.

Demand for Men.

The request, "Please bring a man!" appearing on invitation cards addressed to young girls by the hostesses of private and subscription dances has roused parental anxiety in many dove-cotes in suburban London. Since the war, there has been a "heavy shortage" of desirable young men at these functions, and there is also the problem of "how to get the girls home?" The hostess finds a ready solution to her difficulties in that happy phrase, which has been in vogue for the past three years: "Please bring a man!" "The result of this form of invitation," writes the father of a family of girls, "is that girls without brothers and their brothers' friends are either unable to accept invitations or have to ask a man—and I am led to believe in some cases any man they can get hold of—to go with them.

OFFICE.

I have been asked to quit my work and make the race for county clerk. They say a man of princely race is needed for that august place, a man of virtue unalloyed, a man of weaknesses devoid; a gent of great and soaring gifts in whose renown there are no riffs; 'tis such a paragon they need, and so they come to me and plead. But when I see the weary jays who are in office all their days, who sometimes die but don't resign, I say, "No public snap in mine!" When I turn out a hand made song, the smiling neighbors come along, and say, "Old scout, you're doing well!" Your latest anthem rung the bell!" The man who has a private task gets all the praises he could ask, if he gets down and does his best, at duty's eloquent behest. But when he finds himself in charge of public office, small or large, he cannot do his work so well that voters won't rear up and yell, as voters evermore have screeched, and say he ought to be impeached. I get a little word of praise when I produce some ringing lays, but if they made me county clerk, the populace would roast my work.
