Some Press Opinion on the U. S. Tariff.

The following extract taken from the New York Literary Digest forms interesting reading, containing as it does some American press opinions on the New Tariff. The building of high tariff walls in all countries is proceeding apace, administrations deeming in their wisdom that protection is the panacea for all industrial ills. The erection of tariff barriers may have something in their favor but as a rule duty wars are not productive of or beneficial to mutual trade. The Fordney Tariff hits Newfoundland and fish products, but there is a possibility that an amicable and equitable agreement may be subsequently made between this country and the United States. If not our fish trade with the neighboring republic is practically killed. The argument of the appended article is "Will the New Tariff bring better times?"

"The best intentions of fall of appreciation. Six days a week, from January 6 till June 28, Republican tariff makers labor on a bill intended to 'become the Magna Carta for the perpetuation of our American standard of living and to be the constitution of a uniform and universal prosperity,' only to be informed by one of the most influential and regular Republican dailies of New England, that if their bill were to be made law now 'we should probably find ourselves on the edge of a deeper plunge into public and private adversity than we have yet taken.' The chairman of the committee that drafted the bill modestly disavows having produced a panacea for all national ills, yet ventures to predict with great confidence that its effect upon American industry and American labor will be entirely beneficial, and he is told by a leading business journal that his schedules 'have been so framed as to delay and perhaps check complete restoration of prosperity.' Friends of a protective tariff as represented by dailies like the Republican Buffalo Express and the Independent Washington Post agree with the Congressman from Wisconsin, however, that the enactment of the tariff law he has proposed will be most beneficial and will hasten 'the progress of business revival.' Democratic critics concentrate upon the effect which they think the tariff schedules proposed by Mr. Fordney would have on the consumer. They are 'extortions,' says one; they 'will victimize the consumer,' declares another. 'Vicarious,' 'monstrous,' and 'indescribable' are other characterizations coming from papers which dislike a protective tariff on general principles. Thus another tariff fight is on in the press as well as in Congress, and the battle is being fought chiefly over the effect of the new rates upon prices and business conditions. The first onset seems to be made by the attacking party, and we therefore find editorial defenses of the Fordney tariff plan somewhat scarce as yet; the defenders are apparently still engaged in bringing up and unlimbering their big guns. But on both sides the combatants seem to be hampered by what we might call 'low visibility.' It is practically impossible to tell just how much higher the suggested rates will be than those now existing or to estimate how closely they parallel those of the old Payne-Aldrich Law. It is difficult to say what their effect will be on business, since all the duties are to be estimated on an entirely new principle and most of them are to be subject to modification by executive decree. So the lines of battle are likely to shift and be redrawn again and again from time to time, and there will be amending and clarifying of the measure by both friends and foes before the new Republican tariff law is finally enacted. The Fordney Bill, reported formally in the House on July 6, is to be voted on July 31. Correspondents expect that it will be adopted, possibly with amendments. It will go to the Senate, where it will be debated at length and perhaps virtually redrawn. It may be shunted aside in favor of the new revenue bill. None of the correspondents expects final action before September or October at the very earliest. Thus it is evident that there will be time for expressions of public opinion to have their effect upon the form which the bill eventually takes.

"In the past tariffs have generally been revised by simply taking the old schedules and changing the rates opposite each article on the list. But Mr. Fordney and his committee have completely broken with the past, and these chief innovations must be noted at the outset in order that editorial commendation and criticism may be intelligible to the reader. And the New York Evening Post's Washington correspondent calls attention to some of the 'high spots' in the bill:

"1. The American valuation plan, virtually a novelty in this country's adoption of this plan, it is impossible to size up the effect of the bill as a whole, even the experts being divided as to whether it imposes rates higher or lower than those of the Payne-Aldrich Law of 1909.

"2. The dye-licensing feature, which is also a distinct innovation. If this scheme is adopted a virtual embargo will be placed on competitive German dyes, and the United States Tariff Commission will be given powers of administration and control similar to those exercised during the war by the War-Trade Board.

"3. A set of administrative provisions more comprehensive in scope than those of any previous bill.

"4. A set of schedules varying greatly in quality—some the work of old-line protectionists and some the more moderate product of the Tariff Commission. In the latter category, for instance, is the classification in the chemical schedule, said to be the latest word in scientific construction.

"5. A number of sections which give the President unprecedented powers to bargain with other nations in matters of tariff on a basis of special concessions."

"Nearly $700,000,000 in revenue will be raised annually by the proposed law, say Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee, as compared with the $322,000,000 raised by the Underwood tariff last year. While accurate comparison is impossible, it would seem from various estimates, that the rates in the new bill will be roughly the same as those of the Payne-Aldrich Law and perhaps three times as great as those of the existing tariff."

Legislative Council.

THURSDAY, June 23. The first thing the Upper House did yesterday was to pass unanimously a message to the assembly, disputing the latter's contention as to Money Bills, and asserting its (council's) right to amend any measure received by it without the speaker's certificate that it was a Money Bill. Then it read some bills the third time, and put through final stages the Pulwood Export Bill as amended by the Select Committee appointed at Sir P. T. McGrath's suggestion to modify the bill's clauses and which Hon. George Shea, M.P., presented to the House yesterday. The Committee amended it so as to permit export to Britain and Canada at once and to extend the bill's application to the discretion of the Governor-in-Council. The Fishery Supplies Bill, which Sir P. T. McGrath showed on Tuesday had a number of amendments which Hon. George Shea, M.P., presented yesterday had other amendments, was sent to a Select Committee consisting of Hon. Shea, McGrath, Steer, Mews and Anderson.

The Railway Bill, received from the Lower House, was read the first time and came to second reading today when it is expected that the Council's first big debate for the session will begin. At Sir P. T. McGrath's request Hon. George Shea promised to table to-day certain documents in regard to this matter which were submitted to the House yesterday.

An Inhuman Father.

JUDGE AND POLICE CHIEF COMMENT.

A very sad case was heard in the Magistrate's Court this morning when a young girl was charged with vagrancy. The girl was bound over in the sum of $100. Commenting on the case the Inspector General said:

"This unfortunate girl is the daughter of a man who is worth between $20,000 and $40,000. Because of this girl's unfortunate fall, he refuses to take her back with him to his home unless she abandons the child. The only way she can abandon it is to leave it on the street as she has no means to place it with anyone to look after it. She applied to the Commissioner of Public Charities to look after the child but nothing could be done by him. We have had to take her in at the lock-up the past two nights as she had nowhere to go. I cannot find words strong enough to express my contempt for the unnatural father of this girl. He wants to separate the mother and child from her own flesh and blood. I have tried to get some of those so-called philanthropists, who have done so much good for the poor, to take up this which is a case deserving of their charity but they have refused to come to the front. I would like to pay a tribute to the kindness of the lady who took this girl in her home the first night she was on the street, and kept her for a week, and then she could not afford to do it. She did it out of the goodness of her heart, and put herself to considerable trouble and deprivation to look after this girl and her child."

The following comment was made by Judge Morris: "This is certainly the saddest case that has come before me. This poor unfortunate girl has fallen and she has an affliction in that she cannot speak plainly. The Inspector General, who knows the circumstances of the girl's father, has justly characterized his conduct as inhuman. The poor girl has been before me three times. She has applied to the Poor Commissioner's office and outside of $2.00 per month nothing could be done for her. I advised the father of the child and he paid the $100.00 that the law imposes, and that was paid to the Poor Commissioner and he paid it into the Treasury. Only for the kindness of the lady who took this child would have died, and perhaps his mother had sent her to the Penitentiary. Some charitable disposed person must take the matter into her hands if this poor girl will not be found, and if any charitable person comes along and offers to look after her she can be released from the Penitentiary."

FRIDAY, July 23. Elco Solidified Brillantine is a most elegant and dainty product, and has several advantages over liquid Brillantine, in that it is more effective, more economical, and more easily applied. Many people who have been using the old time brillantines will find Elco a most pleasant change. Price 60 cents a tin.

If you suffer from excessive perspiration, you will find Nest Anti-perspiration for the face, neck and chest, just the very thing you need. The application of this colorless and odorless liquid tends to dry up the superfluous moisture, to prevent its recurrence, and to take away any sweaty odor. Bottles price 75 cents.

Cheap Fish.

During the past few days local traps have not done much with fish. A large percentage of the fish taken are haddock, which are scarcely worth the trouble of splitting, considering the price offered. One of our fish traps for quinaldine fish in one haul sold the lot to a green fish buyer for 35 cents per hundred pounds round. Hook and lines out of position, and the fish were not so fresh as they should be.

Distinguished Visitors.

There are now in the city two prominent citizens of the United States who are shortly returning to Palestine. Dr. Richard B. Wetherill of Lafayette, Indiana, and Colonel Frank H. Lathrop, of Birmingham, Alabama. These two men have been in the country for some time, having been coming to town. Colonel Lathrop was formerly known as James just the U. S. army, is one of the leaders in the Boy Scout movement, and is proprietor of a big timber plant. He is a very intimate friend of Senator Fordney, the father of the new U. S. protective tariff, and was manager of Harding's campaign in Alabama during the past presidential election. Dr. Wetherill is an eminent archaeologist and student of folk lore and has done a great deal of travelling in his time. He was the head of a big hospital in Palestine and has interested himself to a great extent in Jewish Relief Work in Jerusalem and Damascus. He was formerly known as James just the U.
