French Aviator D'Oisy Abandons World Flight—Steamer Burned at Pier in Cleveland, Ohio; Loss Estimated at $200,000.

HONOR TO SCOTLAND AND HER MINER LORD.

EDINBURGH, May 20. His Grace James Brown, and his wife, now Her Grace performed their first public function last evening when, in the great Throne Room of the old Holyrood Palace, the old minister as representative of the King received the keys of the city, presented in accordance with time honored custom by the Lord Provost. All around stood a crowd of gorgeous uniformed men and beautifully gowned women forming the court of the new Lord High Commissioner. The Marchioness of Ailsa attending Mrs. Brown, as lady-in-waiting; and the Marquis of Clydesdale standing by Mr. Brown, as aid; while halberdiers, carrying lochaber axes, formed the guard of honor. The ceremony was brief and merely formal but it was marked throughout by grave dignity in which the unobtrusive bearing of the central figure contributed. Neither showed the slightest embarrassment. At the High Commissioner's request 30 intoxicants were served at the banquet and none will be served throughout Mr. Brown's stay in the palace. It was the first occasion that a dry court has ever been held in historic Holyrood.

For two months, their own bodies absorbed in recompensation of muscular tissues wasted by tuberculosis. MR. J. S. CURRIE INTERVIEWED.

MONTREAL, May 21. Politically speaking, Newfoundland has been moving so rapidly and conditions of parties are in such a chaotic state, that even a newspaper editor from the island is not in touch with the political situation of the Ancient Colony, merely because he has been away from home two months. Smart Work and Discipline on Orca

STORY OF COLLISION OFF FATHER POINT—CAT WARNS WOMAN.

NEW YORK—(A.P.)—Courage and discipline by the officers and crew of the Orca safeguarded the lives of all aboard when the steamer was rammed last Thursday night by the Norwegian freighter Porsanger in a heavy fog off Father Point, Que., according to her 44 passengers.

Before the steamer docked here yesterday the passengers presented to Captain Matthews and his crew a testimonial expressing appreciation of the conduct of officers and men.

With three of her staterooms wrecked and several plates above the water line stove in, the Orca came into port under her own power.

The bow of the freighter struck the steamer on the starboard side amidships. A small plate, below the waterline was dented and a slight stream of water poured into the ship, but the leak was soon stopped with cement.

Mrs. Raymond Fransen, of San Francisco, one of the passengers, attributed her escape from injury to Bonzo, the ship's black cat. She said she was returning to her stateroom when she heard the cat yowling. Remembering the ancient superstition, she went back to the lounge. A few minutes later the collision occurred. Her stateroom was badly damaged.

Immediately after the accident, of officers and men comprising the crew, manned their emergency posts and the lifeboats swung clear, but not lowered. The passengers were reassured and soon the Orca was on her way.

Captain Matthews refused to discuss the accident but corroborated the facts of the collision.

The Porsanger, according to the story of several officers, was sighted by Captain Matthews several moments before the collision. He blew to short blasts indicating he would continue a straight course, the officers said, but the freighter, instead of passing, turned about and struck the Orca. The lifeboats were manned within 8 minutes and the 44 water-tight doors in the hold were closed within 50 seconds, officers said.

Weird Procession

VICTORIA, B.C.—(Can. Press)—After 435 men, women and children had been trapped in the raging inferno of flames which once had been a huge silk factory in the crowded district of Chapel, Shanghai, one of the strangest and most dramatic parades in the strange history of China was held next day when the bodies of 35 of the victims, snatched from the still-smoking ruins, were borne through the streets of the city and heaped on the doorsteps of the Chapel waterworks headquarters as a ghastly feature of protest against the inefficiency of the waterworks system.

The story was brought here by passengers recently arriving from China.

The procession was headed by a band paying the eerie funeral dirges of the Chinese. Then came banners bearing forth in scarlet letters the wrath of the Chapel workers. These were followed by rough coffins of the victims in whose train the family mourners marched. Six thousand silk workers trailed behind the weeping relatives, shouting imprecations, and waving aloft banners and placards, calling for arrest and punishment, and even urging immediate execution, of waterworks officials.

The procession halted before the waterworks building and the bodies were stacked on the broad steps and in the entrance.

On the following day every shopkeeper in the Chapel district slammed up his shutters and went on strike with the factory workers, most of them joining in the weird procession.

The Key to Prosperity

The lack of a settlement in Europe is the very root of most of the economic and industrial evils of the time. Year after year has slipped away and the revival so loudly predicted at the time of peace has not begun. The Continent is as peaceful as a barrel of gunpowder. There is no guarantee that it will not explode at any moment. Business cannot recover when prices, conditions, currencies and governments can hardly be relied upon to last unchanged from one hour to the next. And Germany is the key stone of the whole business. Settle with Germany on a basis which promises some promise, and the wheels of international trade will at once begin to revolve more rapidly.—Johannesburg Times.

Clung to Bottom of Canoe

IN ICEY WATERS OF ST. JOHN RIVER FOR NEARLY TWO HOURS.

GAGETOWN, N.B., May 13.—After nearly two hours in the icy waters of the St. John River, Walter McAllister, 21, was rescued to-day unconscious and clutching grimly to the sides of his overturned canoe. He had recovered to-night and it was thought that he might be able to be about in three or four days without suffering any serious harm.

The young man went up the river in his canoe at about 9 o'clock and it was not until 11 o'clock that Miss Blanche Peters, the school teacher, thought that she heard some one calling. At first she paid no attention. Hearing the cry, again she sent a boy to the home of Fred McCready and Mr. McCready's son took a canoe and soon discovered the overturned canoe with young McAllister holding on. Young McCready pushed the canoe before his own to the shore. He was able to get it so far in that his father and William Meed, a neighbor, waded out and got hold of the other end. The three rescuers got McAllister safely ashore, but it was all that they could do to unlock his clutch on the craft.

Scalloped bands of red linen are used on a linen frock printed in shades of red and blue.
