Ritualistal Row in a Town in the County Cork. Cork, July 22.-One of the strangest chapters in the ritualistic controversy a few days ago at Bandon, County Cork. Visitors to that quaint, old town may now see standing in a prominent position in the public street a Celtic cross, originally erected as a tombstone in Kilbrogan Cemetery, and now bearing this inscription:

was brought to a remarkable climax

It is now erected here to vindicate the insult offered to the

The sculptor doubtless meant to us some other word than "vindicate," but his intention can be understood. The story of the tombstone is culiar. It was first erected in Kilbrogan Cemetery over the grave of Mr. "Jack" Appelbe, by his sister. "Lest we forget Jack Appelbe." the inscription on it began, and it ended. "He did his work and held his peace and had no fear to die." The church authorities objected to the Celtic cross; but the lady declined to remove the tombstone, and so the authorities moved it themselves. They put the ejected Celtic cross in a lane covered over by

Then an appeal was made to the liocesan court, which included high court judge, and though the court had no fault to find with the cross, it could not interfere with the discretion of the local church author

After this some marauders made descent on the laneway, and took the cross from the tombstone. The police took up the matter, and then missing section of the tombstone was restored mysteriously in the night.

The rural district council of Ban don after this decided on a bold and unprecedented course. They voted a public site in the most prominent part of the town of Bandon for the erection of the tombstone the old inscription giving place to the one Serious Conflagrations.

In two fires which broke out in the center of the business district of the city last night, the local fire brigade did "stops" of what might easily have turned out to be disastrous conflagrations. It appeared at first as though the fire was centered in the top of the building, and the bravest efforts of the firemen to locate it were baffled for a time. No chances were taken, however, and lines of hose were laid from every hydrant. The crowd began to wonder why it was that the water was not turned on, but it is the set rule of the new chief never to use water until he can see exactly where the fire is located. All the time the men were working in the rear of the building, and soon the seat of the trouble was found. Then the water was turned on and soon the clouds of smoke disappeared. An investigation showed that the flames were located in the cellar, where all the heavy paper was stored, and where a number of packing cases formed an ideal food for the fire. From end to end the joists of the floor were burned to cinders, and the oil-soaked floor of the pressroom offered a stubborn resistance to the firemen. A LABOR QUESTION Union Wants Ocean Liner Repaired on This Side. New York, July 21,-A committee representing the Central Federation Union of New York City and vicinity, the International Association of Machinists, and the Marine Trades Council, today filed with the federal committee on steamship inspection a protest against the steamship St. Louis of the American Line, being taken over to Ireland for repairs. The protest states Paris, July 22.—The principal Paris that the St. Louis is in an unseaworthy and unsafe condition, that she has only one engine in working order, and that in case that engine breaks down the lives of her crew would be endangered. The protest adds that the only reason apparent for not having the repairs made in the port of New York is, that it may be done at smaller expense in Great Britain. At the offices of the American Line an official of the company said: "That is a labor question, I think. That's about as straight as anything else they undertake to do. The St. Louis is absolutely safe and seaworthy, We are sailing her under the approval of the United States Government. The United States inspectors have looked her over, and they say it is perfectly safe for her to cross the ocean, so far as the sending her over there for repairs is concerned. As to their being any great financial question I wish to say that it is absurd.'
