

THE WOMAN'S CORNER

The Winter Styles For the Hair

If any woman has treasured within her heart the hope that the day to discard false puffs, switches, curls, etc. was at hand, she might as well face her disappointment, for not only must she wear as much as during the past year, but a little more. There is a ray of hope, however, in the fact that the rat is losing ground rapidly, and if worn at all is only at the sides and back of the head.

"You must wear your hair the style that is most becoming to you," said a young woman in one of the leading hair establishments, "and you must experiment until you find out which style it is that is becoming to you and fashionable at the same time. The hair at the front of the head is worn loosely with a part in evidence, where it can be worn, and somewhat in the background, and covered with a fluffy, easy arrangement of the hair, suggesting the pompadour, although there is none when it is not becoming. It is no easy thing to find a becoming way that is fashionable, but this year there seems to be enough variety to suit almost everyone."

Puffs will be worn in preference to switches, and the cute little side curls that have been put away for the past year will be made an important part of the coiffure. Switches will be worn to some extent, but always with puffs, and a head dress with 15 and 18 puffs will be the rule the coming winter. Many women have discarded the rat altogether, and when they want to fill out the hair to make it fluffy at

WHAT THEY SAID

(When mother said it was time for the fall housecleaning.)
"Well, what on earth do you want to clean house for? Seems to me you just got through."

"I don't see the sense of that; the house doesn't need any cleaning as far as I can see."

"Well, if this house is going to be all cluttered up with paperhangers and painters like it was last year, I'm going to live at a hotel till you get through."

"Now, mother, if you're bound to clean house, you're going to get a woman in to help you; there's no sense in your getting all tired out like you did last year."

"That means another attack of indigestion for me; cold scraps for the next week."

"When I'm married, I'm going to have the rooms cleaned thoroughly every week and not have any big cataclysm of cleaning just twice a year. It's old-fashioned."

"If anyone touches any of my books or papers there's going to be trouble!"

"If there's going to be any papering done, I want my room in pink; I've wanted a pink room every since I've been a baby and I've never had it."

"I don't see why you can't wait till you finish one thing before you start another. Here you are, right in the midst of picking and canning, and now you have to get to work and tear the whole house up into the bargain."

"She'll leave just as soon as you try to make her do any hard work; she can cook all right, but she's no worker."

"And just when I wanted to have a party for the visiting girls. No, it will be too late, when you get through. They're all going home in a few days."

CYNTHIA GREY'S
CORRESPONDENTS

Dear Miss Grey:
A gentleman friend is to be married. I want to send a telegram of congratulation. How would you word the same, and to whom should it be sent? IGNORANT.

Address it to the man, and simply say "congratulations."

Dear Miss Grey: I was unfortunate enough to spill cream on a light brown tulle dress, and feel diffident at attempting to remove the stain until I had consulted with you as to the best means. Will you be kind enough to advise me?

AS YOU LIKE IT.
Try chloroform. In using either chloroform or gasoline, begin rubbing with a circular motion, beyond the outer rim of the spot and gradually work in. Otherwise it will probably leave a dark ring.

When a Man Marries

By Mary Roberts Rinehart.

Copyright, 1910, The Bobbs-Merrill Co.

Everyone was very gay; I think the knowledge that tomorrow Aunt Selma was leaving for her home in the country to make the most of her last night of freedom. I tried to be jolly, and succeeded in being cheerful. Mr. Harrison did not come up to enjoy what he had wrought. Jim brought up his guitar and sang love songs in a beautiful tenor, looking at Bella all the time. And Bella sat in a steamer chair, with a rug over her head and a snowed veil on her head, looking at the boats on the river and at us as chastened as an acetylene headlight.

And after Max had told the most improbable tale, which Bella advised him to sprinkle with salt, and Bella had done a clog dance, Bella said it was time for her complexion sleep and went downstairs, and broke up the party.

As she only gave half as much care to her immortal soul, Anne said when she was gone, "as she does to her skin, she would let that nice Harrison boy alone. She must have been brutal to him tonight, for he went to bed at 9 o'clock. At least I suppose he went to bed, for he shut himself in the studio, and when I knocked he advised me not to come in."

I had pleaded my headache as an excuse for avoiding Aunt Selma all day, and she had not said a word. Bella was really quite extraordinary. She was never in the habit of putting herself out for anyone, and she always declared that the very odor of a sick room drove her mad. Bella had already turned on the lights. They said I had had a nightmare, and not to sleep on my back, and perhaps I was taking grumps.

And just then we heard Jimmy run down the stairs, and fall over something, almost breaking his wrist. It was the elderdown comfort, half-way up the studio staircase!

CHAPTER XIII.
He Does Not Deny It.

Aunt Selma got up the next morning, and Jim told her all the strange things that had been happening. She fixed on Flannigan, of course, although she still suspected Betty of her watch and other valuables. The incident of the comfort she called nervous indigestion and had hours.

She spent the entire day going through the storeroom and linen closets, and running her fingers over things for dust. Whenever she found any she looked at me, drew a long breath, and said, "Poor James!"

It was maddening. And when she went through his clothes and found some buttons off (Jim didn't keep a man, and Takahiro had stopped at his boots) she looked at me quite awfully.

"His mother was a perfect housekeeper," she said. "James was brought

The Artificial Rose Is Popular Once More

Everywhere they appear, these little clusters and wreaths of tiny pink roses, like crimson ramblers, but in silk tissue or rice paper.

You may gather a big bunch of them at the waist of your princess gown, on the left side and thus remove the old-fashioned effect.

Or you may border with them the chiffon tunic over your silk underskirt, especially if both are in harmonious shades of pink.

In double rows, they edge the necks of evening gowns and form mock ruffles, with shirred chiffon inserts on the lace-covered silk skirt.

On hats they form loose festoons around the brim, or are piled mountain high in the front of the capuchin bonnets.

On white and pink silk parasols they follow the line of the hemstitching or define the ruffle, and then the handle is of tinted ivory, with a carved rosebud on the very end.

They take the place of buckles on satin evening slippers and on the wide silk girdles, and appear at the centre of Irish lace jabots.

And they are the very best of solutions for the girl whose clothes need that indefinable "toning up" which will give them once more prettiness and charm.

One tablespoon finely chopped onion, two tablespoons butter, one-quarter cup flour, one cup stock, one cup cold cooked lamb, cut in small cubes, two-thirds cup boiled potato cubes, salt and pepper, one spoon finely chopped parsley. Add water, cook one minute, and season with salt and cayenne.

Furs are regarded by many women as a cool and refreshing trimming for dresses that are worn the hottest days of the summer. A fad for fur-trimmed dresses that started recently in Paris has spread quickly in this country. Swansdown especially is in much demand and it is considered no light and fluffy as to be of no disadvantage to a July toilet.
