

FARE OF KING MEGAELES.

Some weeks ago, when I was voyaging on the Ocean, I stopped for a few days in one of the Greek islands, where there was a monastery high up among the hills, within whose walls a monk named Brother Agathos dwelt, who was the librarian of such books and papers and records as the monastery possessed. When the time came for me to take my departure, Brother Agathos seemed sincerely grieved. On the evening of that day, which was to be my last on the island, he came to me holding in his hands a roll of parchment brown and discolored with worn time. As he unrolled it, I could see that it was covered with Greek characters.

"I have here," he said, "a treasure that has never before been revealed to the eyes of a stranger. It is the manuscript of an old Greek poem—a part, I believe, of the lost epic cycle. The authorship is unknown, but it is believed to be a native of this island—a contemporary of Arcturus. The manuscript itself dates from the sixth century of our era—and was transcribed by one of our fathers of our order. If you wish I will read it to you," he said, "and this is the story of it I remember it."

In this land of the Greek seas, when the world was in its white youth, there dwelt a king whose name was Megaeles. All the girls that make men love belonged to Megaeles—and he was a handsome man, and a strong beyond his years. He had in all kinds of manly exercises, whether in the chase or in the arena, a reputation for his prowess. He was a man of a noble and generous nature, and he was a man of a noble and generous nature, and he was a man of a noble and generous nature.

When Megaeles heard him sing of Aphrodite, he smiled and stared at him, saying: "Sing, if you please, of the goddess who is far-darling Apollo, but waste no words on Aphrodite. In this island we hunt and fish, and we sow and reap, and we have no need of Aphrodite. Let her seek their islands for her allars; and then, sing of one of the gods that guard our toils and our labors."

When the young man had departed King Megaeles arose and went to a little headland that overlooked the sea, where, amid the clustering laurels, a temple stood to Poseidon, lord of the sea. Megaeles stretched himself upon the grassy bank of the cliff and gazed out upon the blue flood and the golden evening sky, and mused upon the song of the departed singer and his unwearied came upon him and he fell asleep. And in his sleep he had a vision that the goddess Aphrodite came to him and spoke to him, saying: "Look up, O thou that laughest at the power of love. Behold! I have brought thee a royal lover. Then, in his sleep, the king lifted up his eyes and saw standing by the side of the goddess a woman fairer than had ever been believed that woman could be. For a moment he saw her clearly in the bright effluence that shone round the goddess, and then, unconquerable love upon the gates of his heart. Then a gray cloud hid the goddess and the woman, and Megaeles sprang from his sleep to catch at the empty air."

From that hour the people noted a fearful change come over the spirit of Megaeles. Cloudy care hung about him and shadowed his youth. He cared no more for the woodland music of the hunt, for the dance or the feast, or the glories of the elder or the younger of the maidens of the island. When he was clearly in the bright effluence that shone round the goddess, and then, unconquerable love upon the gates of his heart. Then a gray cloud hid the goddess and the woman, and Megaeles sprang from his sleep to catch at the empty air."

of Menelaos, closed in about Megaeles and bore death in upon him at 20 paces. As he slipped, the spear of Arcturus pierced his breast, and he fell with a great cry upon the plain. The island people, hearing the cry, rushed upon his enemies and swept them aside and lifted up the body of the king and bore him away from the battle. It was evening, and that day's fight was done, and the Trojans were victorious; so the islanders laid their sorely-wounded monarch upon a litter of crossed spears, and bore him slowly back with the rest of the Trojan army to the city, and Paris walked by the side of the litter.

As the convoy passed the Seven gates, Helen, who was standing on the wall of the tower to watch the returning warrior, looked down and saw the sorrow of the island people and the pale face of their dying king. Then Helen leaned over the wall and flung two roses, one white and one red, lightly into the air. The white rose floated softly down to the slow moving litter, and gently fell upon the lips of Megaeles, and a faint smile came over his face, and in that instant his life departed out of his body, and he was laid in his hand and held joyously upon his bier and waved it toward Helen, and so passed into the town, and all the Trojans after him. Every one in the city rejoiced that night save only the island people, who grieved much for their lost leader. But none of them ever returned to the home in the blue sea, but they all died one by one in the years that followed, and soon the very name of Megaeles was forgotten alike in Thrygia and in the island where his race had reigned.

When the monks had finished he sat silent for a few minutes thinking over the sad story. Then I entreated him that he would part with the manuscript, and that I might be allowed to make this long lost treasure known to the scholars of England and Germany. But my words appeared to alarm him, for he at once rose up, and hurriedly brushing the litter, he laid the bosom of his robe, went away and I saw him no more.

My impression is that the manuscript has not the antiquity which the learned monk ascribed to it, but it probably is one of the many medical Greek poems which look upon the war of the gods for their theme. But it is quite possible that the tale itself, which certainly is not to be found in classical literature, is far as I am acquainted with it, may be a genuine tradition dating back from really remote antiquity.

A disease of so delicate a nature as stricture of the urethra should only be entrusted to those of large experience and skill. By our improved methods we have been enabled to speedily and permanently cure hundreds of the worst cases. Pamphlet, references and terms, three letter stamps. See Was Not Paid. From the Chicago Herald. A young lady of the Irish persuasion residing within 100 miles of the Fort, was greatly insulted the other night at a supper. Shortly after her return from the dance, a table young gallant asked her if her "program was full," whereupon she indignantly replied that she had "eaten only a few bites."

Inflammation of the Eyes Cured. Mr. Jacob D. Miller, Newbury, writes: "I was troubled with inflammation of the eyes so that during nearly the whole of the summer of 1882 I could not work. I took several bottles of Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and it gave me great pleasure to inform you that it cured me of my affliction. It is an excellent medicine for cataracts."

the Porcupine. They run in bands, and don't think twice about tackling yearling calves, and sometimes young cattle. Those who have seen them say that after they have killed an animal, they only cut from it while it is warm, and then seek a fresh victim, and bait they don't seem to care for. Very few will run the risk of being fired at for putting out poison, as a license is required, and those who own no cattle, scarcely feel called upon to pay for one. This wolf country is pretty generally all over the range, and under the present governing system, the wolves are having a picnic, and increasing in number. If the government will not offer a bounty for them, the least they can do is to remove the tax for killing them, which is a relic of the barbarous times of wolfing. This should be represented to the government by the officials who have the authority to collect the license fee.

Swallowed a Gun Barrel. From the Mansfield, Tex. Advertiser. A short time ago while H. T. Whitcomb was hunting for woodcock with Mr. Williams, his dog made a run near a large stub, inside of which a noise was heard, and upon cutting through the stub a gun barrel was found, inside of which was a gun barrel, well preserved, over four feet in length, and which weighed about 17 lbs. The barrel is supposed to have been on Sullivan's battlefield, near here, and while his gory, was swallowed by his snake, which, descending the hollow, could not turn about or digest it; so the snake has remained there many years, living on mice, rats, etc. The barrel once owned by Mr. Williams' relic room on his farm here.

Cataract—A New Treatment. Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern science has been attained by the Dixon treatment for cataract. Out of 200 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent. have been cured, and the remainder are so near the least startling result. This is not a new discovery, but a new method of treatment. It is a simple and safe operation, and the patient is cured in a few days. The operation is performed by the use of a special instrument, and the patient is cured in a few days. The operation is performed by the use of a special instrument, and the patient is cured in a few days.

Where to Keep it. Keep it in your family. The best remedy for accidents and emergencies, for cuts, bruises, sprains, sore throats, croup, rheumatism, chilblains and pain or soreness of all kinds, is that marvellous healing remedy, Hagar's Eucalypti Ointment. Can a cannibal acquire a literary taste by eating an author? Mrs. E. H. Perkins, Clerk Centre, Warren Co., N. Y., writes: She has been troubled with asthma for four years; had a table young gallant asked her if her "program was full," whereupon she indignantly replied that she had "eaten only a few bites."

Judging from the amount consumers have to pay it seems that gas meter inspectors must wear double magnifying glasses. A cold snap—the crack of an Esquimaux's whip. —What a comfort to be able to gratify one's appetite on more without pain, after long suffering from dyspepsia! Victims of indigestion will do well to accept the general verdict in favor of Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery and Dyspepsia Cure as the most reliable and can enjoy the welcome relief. Obsolete dyspepsia, constipation and biliousness invariably yield to its potent regulating action.
