

a noise, apparently at a small distance from her. In the first emotion of her fear she fled back into the wood to conceal herself; but soon considering that nothing worse could happen to her than she had already experienced, she regained the river side, and perceived two Indians pushing a canoe into the water. She went up to them and implored their assistance in conducting her to Andoas. The humane Indians, touched with her situation, offered to take her into their canoe, and she soon arrived at the place of her destination, where she found the relief she expected: her health was soon restored, and she easily found means to join her husband.

