Bacchus. There are many beautiful situations upon this Island, the residences of the Seigneurs, etc. Upon the main land are seen the villages of St. MICHAEL, St. Thomas, and Beaumont. Very shortly the traveler sees Cape Tourmente, raising itself eighteen hundred feet above the river; and following this are other promontories on the northern shore.

GROSSE ISLE is soon passed, upon the left, and with its white-washed sheds for the emigrants, its little church, and its forests of evergreens, presents a pretty picture. This is the quarantine station for the port of Quebec, and it was here that the ship fever committed such ravages among the emigrants, during the seasons of 1848 and '49.

We next come to Crane Island. This is a beautiful, fertile island, and upon the northern end is seen the pleasant residence of the Seigneur. "The Pillars," fifty-five miles from Quebec, are a collection of rocky islets, upon one of which stands a light-house. The view here is very beautiful; the width of the river below looks like the opening of the ocean, and the shores are studded with little villages, their white houses glittering in the sunlight, while the dark mountains in the distance form a magnificent back-ground.

ISLE AUX COUDRES is on the north shore, sixty-five miles from Quebec. Tradition asserts that CARTIER
